Locke points out that in this day and age, finding someone's personal information is easier than ever. One's salary, bank account balances, address and even credit card information can be bought and sold, possibly over the Internet. Con men don't "come to the back door" anymore as they did thirty years ago, said Locke. They appear in a variety of ways that the senior must always be on the look out for.

Sullivan recalled a time when the Plymouth D.A.'s office employed only six people, back in the '60s. Some of the six were even parttime, he says. Today, the same office employs 125, all fulltime. In response to an obviously growing need, the "Senior Protection Team" was started in 1995. Sullivan attributes the growing number of crimes committed on seniors to the fact they are the group that lets more crimes go unreported than any other. Whether it is because of embarrassment or fear of retaliation or belief that even an abusive relative taking care of them is better than no one, seniors let many crimes go unnoticed.

He insists the police "want to get calls, no matter how slight." He says the ultimate goal is that the senior not be victimized.

The most horrifying story for Sullivan, the one that he says "makes me think of my grandmother every time I tell it," is the story of an elderly woman who went to the grocery store one Saturday morning, as she had many times. This Saturday morning, a 23-year-old drug addict attacked the 74-year-old Brockton woman and stomped on her chest until she gave up her purse. The assailant was given a life sentence that Sullivan believes sends a message that "violent crimes against our citizens, particularly our senior citizens, will not be tolerated."

The "File of Life" system was created in the Plymouth County's District Attorney's Office as well. It is simply a card the senior keeps on the refrigerator to alert an E.M.T. of personal medical information in case of emergency. It is easy to spot in a hurry because it's in red pouch. All of these programs, Sullivan pointed out, are created without the use of taxpayers' money. The bottom of the Senior Protection Brochure confesses the secret, "This brochure was paid for with money seized from drug dealers."

The District Attorneys want the seniors to know the resources available to them. The local police department is always there, as are their offices. Community implemented programs such as the "Neighborhood Crime Watch" are also effective. It is most important, however, to stay informed on an individual basis to prevent crime. To protect yourself "at your door and your telephone," as Sullivan says, and never feel powerless over crime.

Skippers stay on perfect roll to tourney

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

There's a dozen good reasons why the Cohasset High girl's tennis team was undefeated this season, going into Wednesday's match with Abington High.

Actually. It's really a Baker's Dozen, since the coach, Sara Meehan, has to be included along with the 12 players on the team that have posted a 13-0 record to win the South Shore League Championship.

Meehan doesn't point to any one player as the star of the team, instead she sees the team as one big chain with no weak link.

Coach Meehan wasn't about to talk about just one or two players. No way, it was all or nothing. In a way, it was a pleasure to talk to a coach that wanted to talk.

Katie Brister, a junior and tri-captain has been with coach Meehan for five years and is the number two singles player on the team. Katie played two matches as number one, and compiled a record 13-0. One of four sisters that have played tennis at Cohasset High, she has also been named to the SSL All-Star team.

"You can always count on her," stated the coach.

Jessica Stevens, a junior and tri-captain. A double player, she plays number one and number two. "Jessica is one of the strongest doubles players in the league," notes coach Meehan, "and to go along with that, she's a true captain."

Sara MacDonald, a senior and tri-captain. Sara will be off to Boston University next year. "I am really going to miss her," said the coach. "She has been with me for five years, playing singles and doubles, and she has been instrumental in helping with the middle school program."

Kate Stone, a sophomore and first singles. Kate has been with the team four years and has been number one for two years. She missed two matches this season, because of time spent in France, but still compiled a 10-1 record. "She was quite fine for me," stated the coach. "She's a great competitor and has also been named a SSL All-Star."

Kelly Stone, and eighth grader and sister of Kate. She has played mostly singles. "She was involved in a lot of tough matches this season, but I look for big things from her in the future," said Meehan.

Ary Afshar, a freshman and third singles player. "She was the big surprise this season. She came out of no where and played like she just belonged in the position," said Meehan. "She is small, very petite, and

Skippers put two in the win column

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

In a last ditch effort to salvage a season that could have been, the Cohasset Skippers baseball team thrashed a visiting squad from Norwell 14-6.

The game was never in doubt, as the Skippers jumped out to a lead in the second inning and held it.

Greg Taylor and Joe Pergola both had multiple-hit, multiple-RBI games and Sean Conte pitched in with a triple. Senior Pat Hurley also picked up two hits, including a triple, in his last high school game. Hurley will attend Boston College next year and hopes to play for the ball team there.

With Hurley, Conte, Ben Ketchum and Denis Rooney taking shifts patrolling the outfield, nothing fell in that could have been caught, as the outfielders showed their progress throughout the season.

On the diamond, Taylor and Al Schwerin both had outstanding days with the glove, and junior backstop Sean Parkinson called an outstanding game from behind the plate.

His batterymate, Jim O'Sullivan, got roughed up for two quick ones in the top of the first, but held on for the rest of the game. With his teammates making both routine and brow-raising plays behind him, O'Sullivan held the Clippers scoreless until they scraped together four in the top of the seventh, but at that point the game was already in the bag.

In a last ditch effort to salvage a season that could have been, the Cohasset Skippers baseball team thrashed a visiting squad from Norwell 14-6.

The win was a bittersweet one for Cohasset. While it felt nice to end the season with a win (making it two in a row after last Monday's victory over Hull), by playing such a tight, well-executed game, the Skippers allowed themselves to see how much fun the year could have been if they had gotten their act together in midseason. A perfect example of that execution occurred in the bottom of the first inning, during the most exciting and timing-oriented play in baseball.

With three runs already in and the bases juiced, Schwerin stepped to the plate. Now wielding a hefty bat after an early season slump, Schwerin was given the bunt sign, and Ketchum, the runner on third, was signaled to break for home on the pitch, making the play a suicide squeeze.

If Schwerin had missed the bunt or laid down a poor one, Ketchum would have been tagged out and a rally would have been snuffed. But Schwerin came through, dropping an absolutely textbook bunt down the first-base line and had to hustle out of the batter's box to avoid the scoring, hustling Ketchum. With his wheels humming, Schwerin beat out the bunt at first.

Such an exciting play executed so well was rare for the Skippers this year, especially during their nine-game slide. Bunting has been a problem the entire season and to see Schwerin perform so nicely in a pressure situation gave hope that maybe next year will be different.

Cohasset finished their season at 7-13, and a wrap-up article will appear next week.

ATHLETES OF THE MONTH

CHS JV softball team

What has 20 legs, catches flies and is well on its way to becoming extinct?

Why it's our Mariner Athlete of the Month, the Cohasset junior varsity softball program.

The girls ended their season by taking on Hull last week in what looks to be the last gasp for the softball program at CHS. The girls played a junior varsity schedule this season and at this point there is no funding to field a team next season.

"It's kind of a sad occasion," said head coach Mike Gill. "The school has had the softball program for as long as anyone can remember, but now it's going to be gone."

More than a money issue, the program may have suffered its fate from a different type of numbers crunch. With a total student enrollment of only 275, softball had to compete with other spring sports options such as track, lacrosse, sailing and tennis for their athletes.

Holy mackerel, those fish are really biting!

"Hey Mark!"

Startled, I looked up from my reverie. The gas pump at Lucky Leo's was jamming home another load of 87 octane. At the next pump, Rick Kelly was loading one of his landscape trucks for the day.

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

"You should have seen the mackerel yesterday, stacked right up against the beach. You could walk in the water knee-deep and scoop them out," he gesticulated, both arms motioning.

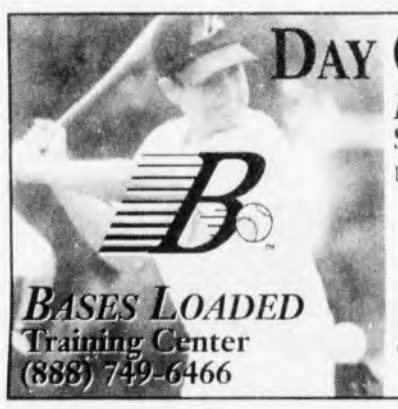
"We were working. . ." he started.

"Down at Ray's?" I interrupted, "at Black Rock Beach?"

"Yeah, there were so many you could see them, right there at the shore."

I chuckled recalling the previous day as I had shot over to Hull for lunch. Surfcasters and fly-fishermen were wading into the low waves likely seeking the big stripers that had driven the mackerel in.

Kris Kent had hiked out along the Glades and reported seeing great schools of mackerel zooming by in the clear water. First the mackerel would go ripping by and then the stripers would go swooping after them he reported. It was a good time to have bait in the water, judging by the 35-inch bass he managed to catch. Brendan Leung was along for the same trip and had the odd circumstance of a mackerel taking his mackerel chunk.



Karen Hallett took a day trip on the Captain Mac out of Scituate Harbor and caught a fish that wowed the neighborhood. Mind you, this fish was no beauty queen, it was a wolffish. In the "Bottom Dunkers Bible," Capt. Roger Jarvis accurately refers to the wolffish as "a nominee for an Oscar in the ugly category!" A large chunk of seaclam had enticed this bottom dweller to the hook and it dropped the scale 26 pounds and 7 ounces. The 41-inch fish was destined for the chowder pot, menacing snarl and all.

Pete Flaherty weaved through the rocky ledges with guest Steve Anderson of Sandwich aboard. Barely visible in the dying wake behind the boat, twin tube lures revolved, spinning two fluttering fat seaworms. That proved too much for the 30-pound linesider, Steve hauled in to the scale. Forty-four and 1/2 inches long was the tale of the tape. A good start to the season.

Justin Runey has been finding the fishing good along the shores of Lily Pond catching loads of sunnies and bluegills each time out. Michael Tulimieri had the fishing trip of his six-year lifetime recently at the Norris Reservation. Mike managed to catch three beautiful rainbow trout while "fishing guide" Tony Fitzgerald nailed a tiger trout.

Practically everyone fishing is connecting with good fish, whether the destination be fresh or salt. Smoother weather is forecast and many are taking advantage of the best mackerel run in recent memory. Andy and Dan Collins motored their skiff into a thick batch near Minot's Light and had a 100-pound boxful in no time. Shore bound anglers seeking mackerel have traditionally done well at Pemberton Pier in Hull and Castle Island. Duxbury Bay is thick with baitfish now. Anglers are elbow to elbow along the bridge, seeking stripers and tautog.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

Junior lacrosse clubs split weekend games

The Cohasset White 12 and Under team continued an unbeaten season May 17, powering past a club from Bourne 16-4 behind a record-setting performance from Michael Rasmussen.

Rasmussen had a hand in 12 of the team's 16 goals, scoring seven goals and five assists en route to the highest single-game point total in the three-year history of the junior program. D.J. Silvia added two goals and an assist, Malcolm Stansell scored twice and Paul Cotter picked up a goal and assist. Jon Grimm, Jonathan Littauer, Timothy Pilczak and Mike Geddes added single tallies for Cohasset White.

Nick Murphy and Chris Simms combined in the net for seven saves to stifle any Bourne hopes of getting back in the game. Cohasset White is now 5-0.

"Thus far, this team has taken control of every game it has played," said Chuck Jaffe, who along with Bob Inman coaches both Cohasset White and Blue squads. "It's hard to tell whether they haven't been seriously tested yet, or if they simply have passed the tests with flying colors, but they certainly live up to our goal of making opponents play very well to even have a chance to beat us."

Also on May 17, the Cohasset Blue squad dropped its first game to anyone outside of town — Blue lost to the White team at the May 15 Lacrosse Jamboree — losing a 7-6 heartbreaker to Hanover.

After falling behind 3-0 in the first quarter, Cohasset pulled to within 5-3 at the half. Cohasset closed to within 6-5 early in the fourth quarter before giving up one quick goal. It was Cohasset from then on out, with one goal pulling the team close and several shots in the final two minutes of the game.

Nick Murphy and Paul Digan each scored twice for Cohasset Blue, and Chris Simms — starting his first game in the goal — made 10 saves, including some spectacular stops in the third quarter to keep Hanover from pulling away.

"This was a great game," said Jaffe. "We didn't cash in some early opportunities, and they did, which put us in a hole. But the kids played with a lot of heart and earned a chance to tie it up at the end. We're disappointed with the loss, but not with the effort. Our kids played their guts out."

Cohasset's junior squads put their guts on the line this week in two separate games against Quincy, then have a holiday break before resuming the Mass. Bay Youth Lacrosse League schedule May 31 with road games at Falmouth and Barnstable.

Jaffe lacrosse clinic for grades five and six

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Mr. Chuck Jaffe will direct, again this summer, an eight-week lacrosse clinic for youngsters in grades five and six.

Clinics are held Mondays at Miliken Field, from 6:30 to 8 p.m., beginning Monday, June 29, and continuing eight weeks through Aug. 17. The cost for the eight-week, full-equipment, contact clinic is $35 per participant.

Registration forms are currently available at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Space is limited. Mr. Chuck Jaffe, a Cohasset resident and former collegiate lacrosse player and league coach, volunteers his services for this unique lacrosse opportunity.

American Cancer Society's "Relay for Life" is this weekend

The American Cancer Society's South Shore Unit will hold its Relay for Life on May 29 and 30 involving teams of walkers and runners who will round a track, around the clock, to raise funds for the fight against cancer.

According to Mary Jeanette Murray, event honorary chairman, the American Cancer Society hopes to raise $35,000 during the relay, through walkers collecting sponsorships from friends, family members, and co-workers. The relay will be held at Charles Davis Memorial Track at Cohasset High School.

Each team will keep a representative on the track throughout the 24 hours, with members walking in half-hour shifts. Starting the "night-shift" will be a candlelight ceremony to remember loved ones who have fought cancer. Team members camp out around the track throughout the night. A pancake breakfast will take place on Saturday, May 30 beginning at 7 a.m. The breakfast is open to the public.

"I encourage anyone interested in joining the Relay for Life to call the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600," Murray said. "The relay will be a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something practical to support the American Cancer Society's research , education, and patient service programs."

The American Cancer Society is seeking people to form teams for the relay, and to join teams that need a few more members. To date, 17 teams have registered to participate. The planning committee is hoping to secure thirty teams this year. Teams can be families, friends, churches, organizations or companies.

Funds raised during the relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs, including a research initiative that has supported 28 Nobel Prize winners during its history. The society is continuing the world's largest population study and continues to examine factors that affect cancer risk.

The American Cancer Society is also a source for comprehensive information about cancer through its 1-800-ACS-2345 number, which operates from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Fridays. Funds raised during the Relay for Life support this service, which also connects callers to services offered for patients and families.

Local services provided by the American Cancer Society to cancer patients include transportation to outpatient treatment by Road to Recovery volunteer drivers, support for women with breast cancer through the Reach to Recovery visitor program, and information on maintaining personal appearance during treatment through the Look Good.... Feel Better program.

To obtain information about the "Relay for Life" and tickets to the Pancake Breakfast, please call the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600 ext. 232.

she never stops smiling. She beat the best singles player in the league in a three set match. Her play has been a huge, huge, contribution." The coach continued, "She has not lost a set this year and has also been named to the SSL All-Star team." Last year she was 12-0, missing two matches due to a roller skating accident.

Caitlin Flint and KC Camacho. "These two kids just clicked right from the start as a doubles team. It's as though they read each other's mind. They seen to know what the other is going to do before they do it," bubbled the coach.

Jessica Niessink, sophomore, who plays singles and mostly doubles. "She's a consistent winner," stated the coach, who added "she has the hardest serve on the team and is one of three girls in her family to play tennis at CHS.

Jessie Zerendow, a sophomore. Her sister, Alexis, played for coach Meehan for five years. "Jessie came out of nowhere. She has just been one of the biggest surprises for us," stated Meehan.

Katie Devine, a junior, who will be one of the captains next year. "We got her from the lacrosse team," coach Meehan declared. "She has proven to be an awesome tennis player, she is undefeated and just an unbelievable athlete," said Meehan.

Marcia Boone, a sophomore. "She has played mostly exhibition matches this season, but she has gained by leaps and bounds. She will be heard from plenty next season," said Meehan.

Quincy Hospital announces 9th Annual Golf & Tennis Tournament

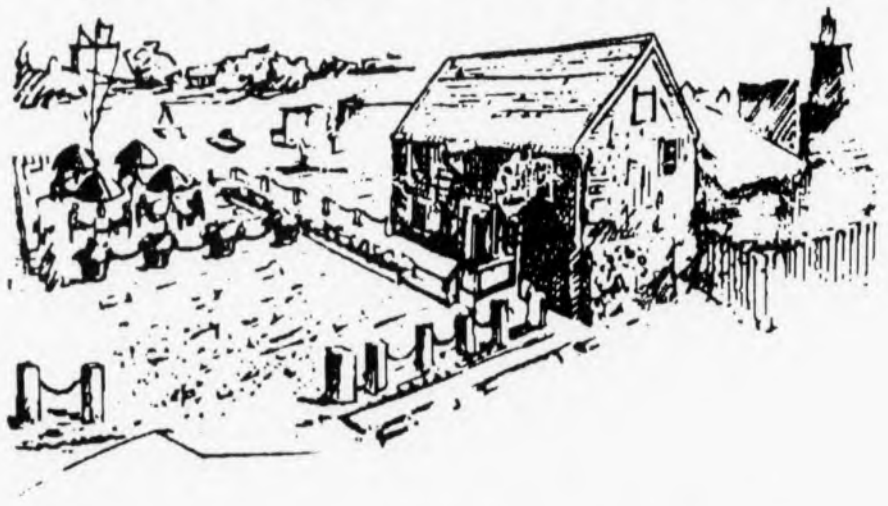
Quincy Hospital is holding its ninth annual golf and tennis tournament Monday, May 18, at the Cohasset Golf Club.

The tournament, organized by the Quincy Hospital Health & Education Foundation, enables area corporations, local physicians and hospital employees to show their support for quality healthcare at Quincy Hospital by coming together for an unforgettable day of networking, relaxation and friendly competition.

The Quincy Hospital Health & Education Foundation provides support for advanced medical technologies and services at Quincy Hospital. For more information about sponsorship opportunities and/or participation in the day's activities, call Jean Parker or Maryrose Mirick at (617) 397-5495.

Recreation accepting applications for summer employment

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting applications for Playground Program Counselors for their seven-week day camp program.



Candidates should have demonstrated experience working with children in a structured setting. Applicants must be 18 years of age by July 1, 1998. Employment is for seven weeks, from June 29 through August 14 plus a one-day orientation during late June.

CPR certification is mandatory and the recreation commission will conduct a course during late June for those who need CPR certification.

Openings exist for both the preschool 3 fi- to five-year-old half-day program and the five- to 12-yhear-old, full day programs.

Should you be interested in applying, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at (781) 383-4109 for an application or further information.

P.A.C. meeting slated

The last P.A.C. meeting of the school year will be held at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, June 2 in the Deer Hill teachers lounge. All parents/guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome.

For further details, contact P.A.C. Chairperson Kim Maynard, 383-2707.

Ireland for singles only

South Shore Singles will sponsor a singles-only forum at the 7:30 p.m., June 2, at the First Parish Hall, 24 River St., Norwell. Join Judith Enright, award winning photographer, as she presents her slides, stories and other experiences from her many trips to Ireland. Call (781) 545-0534.

Joseph Osgood School move

The Joseph Osgood School Move Committee is looking for volunteers to help with the move to the new school. To save money, volunteers will be responsible for the packing and unpacking of classrooms and various offices, although the physical move of boxes will be handled professionally. Specifically, the committee is looking for volunteers on the following dates:

Packing of classrooms and offices at Joseph Osgood, Aug. 10 and 11 (Monday and Tuesday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Unpacking at new school, Aug. 27 and 28, (Thursday and Friday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Free baby-sitting will be provided. If you can help out, call Sarah Markert at 383-6124 or Cassandra Rioux at 383-2856 to sign up.

Osgood pupil Colleen Richardson models her "funky glasses" made in Betsy Ogden's third-grade art class during a special reception at the Mass. Audubon Center off Route 3A in Marshfield. Every student in grades 1-3 had a piece of artwork on display. More than 200 children attended the lemonade reception along with parents and staff.

Osgood celebrates closing

The Joseph Osgood School, on Ripley Road, will close its doors in June. Osgood memories will be shared during this event. All teachers, students (past and present), family and friends are invited to join a gathering to be held during Harborfest on the Town Common June 6 from noon to 4 p.m. Visit the tents on the Common which will house displays of photographs and students' artwork.

Bring your family and friends to an Osgood Celebration Pancake Breakfast, sponsored by the Rotary Club. The breakfast will be held in the common in the Osgood Celebration tent from 8 to 10 a.m. at a cost of $3 per person. Afterwards, stop by the Teen Center's Softball Throw and have your throw "clocked."

The PSO will be selling Osgood 70th Birthday Celebration T-shirts during the Harborfest weekend with proceeds to benefit the new school's playground.

Join the fun and come celebrate Osgood's history and memories as it closes its doors.

Beachfest at Nantasket

From 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday, June 27, Wellspring Multiservice Center will sponsor a fun-filled Beachfest on Nantasket Beach in Hull. Kite-making and flying, a 10k beach-walk, face painting, a sand sculpture contest, kids' old fashioned brick treasure hunt, frozen yogurt, beverages, foul shooting contest and more. Buttons are $5 for adults and $10 for families. Meet at the Mary Jeanette Murray Pavilion. Call Wellspring at (781) 925-3211 for more information.

Gospel singers in concert

At 8 p.m., Saturday, June 20, First Parish Church and the Cohasset Diversity Committee will co-sponsor the New Temple Singers in a Gospel Concert at the First Parish Meeting House on Cohasset Common. Tickets at $7 in advance ($10 at the door) will be on sale at the church office for further information (781) 383-1100.

Post prom party: 'Night with the stars'

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It's knowing how quickly special moments become mere memories, something young people don't realize until years later because for them the excitement of life lies ahead, not in the moment.

This idea was the motivation in the effort to preserve the memory of prom night for the 1998 graduating class of Cohasset High School. Two senior class mothers, Margaret Tufts and Diane Dooley, gathered other parents to help organize a party from midnight until 6 a.m. after the prom on the evening of June 3, so that CHS seniors can be together for one final time before graduation.

"It's not the first class that benefited from parents who have organized post prom activities," said Tufts, whose daughter, Kelly, is a senior this year. "Every year, there are house parties and church breakfasts, and I know the time and effort that went into that organization. But, Diane and I thought it would be great if the seniors had a place to go to, where they could all be together for the night in a fun environment, without having to worry about driving or getting home at a certain hour."

"The results were an astounding number. Out of 60 seniors, 56 responded with 'yes.' The three things they wanted were a casino, a DJ and a moonwalk. They got it."
Margaret Tufts on the survey

After learning how successful the Scituate and Hingham High Schools were in transforming their schools into post graduation party halls, the two mothers visited Hingham last year on Senior Night and were stunned at the outcome, the fun, and the high attendance of the seniors.

"It was obvious that this is a popular thing to do. We thought our seniors deserved the same," said Tufts.

At the end of February, they created a survey form that was given to all the CHS seniors, asking them if a post prom party was something they would be interested in. The form included choices of what the seniors would like to have at their party.

"The results were an astounding number. Out of 60 seniors, 56 responded with 'yes.' The three things they wanted were a casino, a DJ and a moonwalk," said Tufts. "They got it."

Getting other parents to assist them was the next task, said Tufts. But, soon, they had parents broken into committees and the work was underway.

"We enlisted the help of Betty O'-Sullivan, who is a junior class mother in charge of organizing parents in her class to run the party that night. We decided not to have any of the seniors' parents there, and the junior class parents have been great about signing up to run the casino, the food court and chaperone for the evening. These are parents who are willing to give up a night's sleep to help. It says a lot for the parents," Tufts said.

Parents on the decorating committee have been meeting Thursday nights, transforming rest rooms, painting scenery, cutting stars and building sets.

"It's the 'Night With the Stars,' and we're going all out with making the gym and surrounding areas magical, glamorous and special for the graduating class."

Although many of the details regarding the post prom party could not be divulged, Tufts did say that when the seniors arrive at the cafeteria entrance of the school, they will be turning in their $30 ticket for $30,000 in paper money to be used at the casino, for raffle money and other planned activities.

"There will be three blackjack tables, a money wheel and a roulette wheel. Raffles will be held every hour and we have great prizes. The stipulation of the winning ticket is that the holder has to be there to collect his or her prize."

The moonwalk is 50 feet, big enough to play volleyball in.

The disc jockey will entertain seniors in the disco section of the gym and a celebrity disc jockey is scheduled to appear during the party, one whose name is being withheld.

There will be quiet spots for those who want to relax and get away from the activities. A television will be set up, with videos of the prom and pre-prom parties as well as movies. In the courtyard, beach chairs will be set up for those who want to sit and talk in the night air.

Snack foods and beverages will be served all night, until 5 a.m., when breakfast will be served.

"The class has chartered a boat to take them to their prom destination which is at the Long Wharf Marriot in Boston. They will arrive back in Cohasset before midnight, at which time they'll go home to change into more casual clothes before coming to the party. Once they arrive, they're here to stay. They don't have to drive anywhere or worry about having to be home at any hour. They can just relax and enjoy each other," Tufts said.

For parents who are interested in seeing the results of all this effort, a walk-through that evening is scheduled at 10:30 p.m., when the doors will be opened and the public can walk through before the seniors begin arriving.

"You may find us doing last-minute things, but for the most part, it'll all be in place. We invite everyone to come see. We're already proud of what we've done so far. It's going to be a great evening."

According to Tufts and Dooley, everyone from parents, teachers, and school administration to local businesses, police, and local politicians have been generous with their assistance in goods and services.

The post prom party co-chairs would like to thank the following parents for their greatly appreciated time and energy in pulling the event together: Holly Holway, Pat Kilroy, Debbie Flanagan, Bett O'Sullivan, Connie Afshar, Paula Buick, Annette Sawchuk, Barbara Buckley and Joan Pyfrom.

"We clearly could not have done this without all their assistance. The junior class this year will carry on the party next year and ask for assistance again from next year's junior class parents and the same groups of people. We feel confident that the idea of a post prom party each year will be successful and hope the tradition will go on," said Tufts.

Donations from townspeople are welcome to help offset the cost of the party. For more information, call Margaret Tufts at 383-6985.

CPBS presents dance with 'Original Beat'

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Plays By the Sea dance company, "Original Beat," has choreographed an interpretive dance piece of the same name and will perform it, under the direction of Sharon Weber, Friday, May 29, at 7:30 p.m. in the Cohasset High School auditorium.

Interpretive dance is the rendering of a meaning through artistic performance, and unlike ballet, tap, jazz and ballroom, it is historically unfamiliar to many people who aren't personally involved with the arts, or who think dancing is just moving your feet when you hear music.

Sharon Weber, founder of Cohasset Plays By the Sea, was interested in the ambitious concept of "Original Beat" because she wanted to reach out to youngsters who 'march to the beat of a different drum,' no pun intended.

"It's a performance piece based on rhythm and movement, a far cry from the hugeness of the drama club's past smash productions of 'The Wizard of Oz' and 'Annie,'" Weber said.

The origin of the piece began many months ago with the slow beat of a drum, awakening in the 10 young dancers a call to their ancestral roots; stories passed down in their families of people, places, and events — an immigration from Ireland for one, a relative who was a courageous police officer for another, the threat of the bombing of a classroom during the Cuban Missile Crisis, and a jailed relative in South America were some of the ideas the youngsters brought to rehearsals.

"These are kids who play soccer, softball and basketball, but they wanted to be involved with an activity they could put their creative stamp on. They were willing to stick their necks out and do something different, something that came from within themselves. They came up with their own ideas and I introduced them to the concept of creating their own work that's never been done before. For them, this piece is a once-in-a-lifetime event. It's given them the experience of going through the process of coming up with an idea and using improvisation to give it a life of its own."

The response from the 10 fifth- and sixth-graders was simple and enthusiastic.

"There were only about 10 of us in the company, so we all got to do a lot," Charlotte Sida said. "We choreographed our own work and we all perform onstage."

"I thought we were the only ones doing this type of dance until Mrs. Weber brought us into Boston to see "Tap Dogs." She told us there are a lot of dance companies who perform interpretive dance. "We just happen to be young to be learning it," Jenna Lowe said, who added that seeing "Tap Dogs" helped the company with the beginning and end of their piece.

Weber said that it is not so much about the audience knowing what the stories are or who the piece is about, but seeing how the dance company used the information about their families' stories to help them make decisions about their work in this production that is important.

"The stories were a vehicle to come up with work that otherwise wouldn't have been so meaningful and maybe would have been more difficult to guide. They needed to feel the spirit of their pieces personally. Once the ideas were in place, the stories were cast away like molds."

Working with the dance company whose ages range from 10- to 12-years-old was not difficult for their director.

"First, I think it takes a great deal of courage for kids this age to venture into a project like this," Weber said. "There were risks because it's different. We live in an age when people mask their differences for fear of rejection. That they took this risk speaks to who they are inside. As their director, they were a great age to work with because cognitively, they were able to grasp the concepts. They are also young enough to have the freedom of identity. They're not concerned so much about how they look as they fling themselves around the stage in rehearsal. Younger kids have that freedom, but it's difficult for them to grasp the concepts. An older group may not have the freedom of movement they have."

Weber said she hopes this process gives the dancers the appetite for creating their own work in the future in all areas of their lives as well.

"I want them to feel comfortable with their own concepts, to know that they are capable, that they have access within themselves to create original work. It's a building of self-esteem and confidence."

Speaking to this, the most challenging aspect of the project for Weber was to facilitate the dancers' minds to go from the concrete into the abstract.

"They wanted concrete costumes and set designs, movements that fed the audience their stories. That's what they knew, not only through classroom work and other theater productions, but sports and home life as well. I had to push them beyond that into abstraction because interpretive dance comes from deep within. Imagination and soul. That had to be in place in order to give their energy and spirit to the piece. Consequently, the set is minimal, the costumes are simple. It's all about the rhythm of the drums and their movement," she said.

Providing the rhythm is Harvey Wirht, a native of South America, who lives in Boston and plays percussion for bands internationally as well as in the Boston area. Of Wirht, whom Weber met professionally, she said, "His rhythm influence is South American. It's an intriguing, interesting sound that the kids took to right away. It's different, cool."

EPA to revise pollution study

Towns say rail report off track

By Carol Britton Meyer and Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITERS

The Environmental Protection Agency says it plans to retool a report it released last Friday which claimed the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad will improve air quality.

Officials at the EPA confirmed this week that its report has some errors, including the fact that the EPA calculated its projections based on 12 train trips in and out of Boston, not the 24 the MBTA has scheduled for the Greenbush line.

"I was astonished to find numerous mathematical and other errors in the EPA report, which cast great doubt on its utility."

HINGHAM'S GREENBUSH COORDINATOR ALEXANDER MACMILLAN.

MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan acknowledged the EPA's error on the number of train trips, but said it is something that agency will have to address. "That's up for the EPA to explain," Brennan said.

"It was an error on our part," said EPA spokesman Leo Kay. Kay said the agency will revisit the issue and will release a follow up on the study in the next few weeks. "We're going to go through the entire EIR with a fine-tooth comb and take a closer look," he said.

The EPA conducted the independent test of the air quality conclusions reached by the MBTA and found itself agreeing with the transit authority that restoring commuter rail service along the Greenbush right of way would help decrease emissions of two major pollutants — carbon monoxide and volatile organic compounds — by removing a large number of automobiles from the road.

While MBTA officials are pleased that the EPA study corrobo-

New library chief is hired

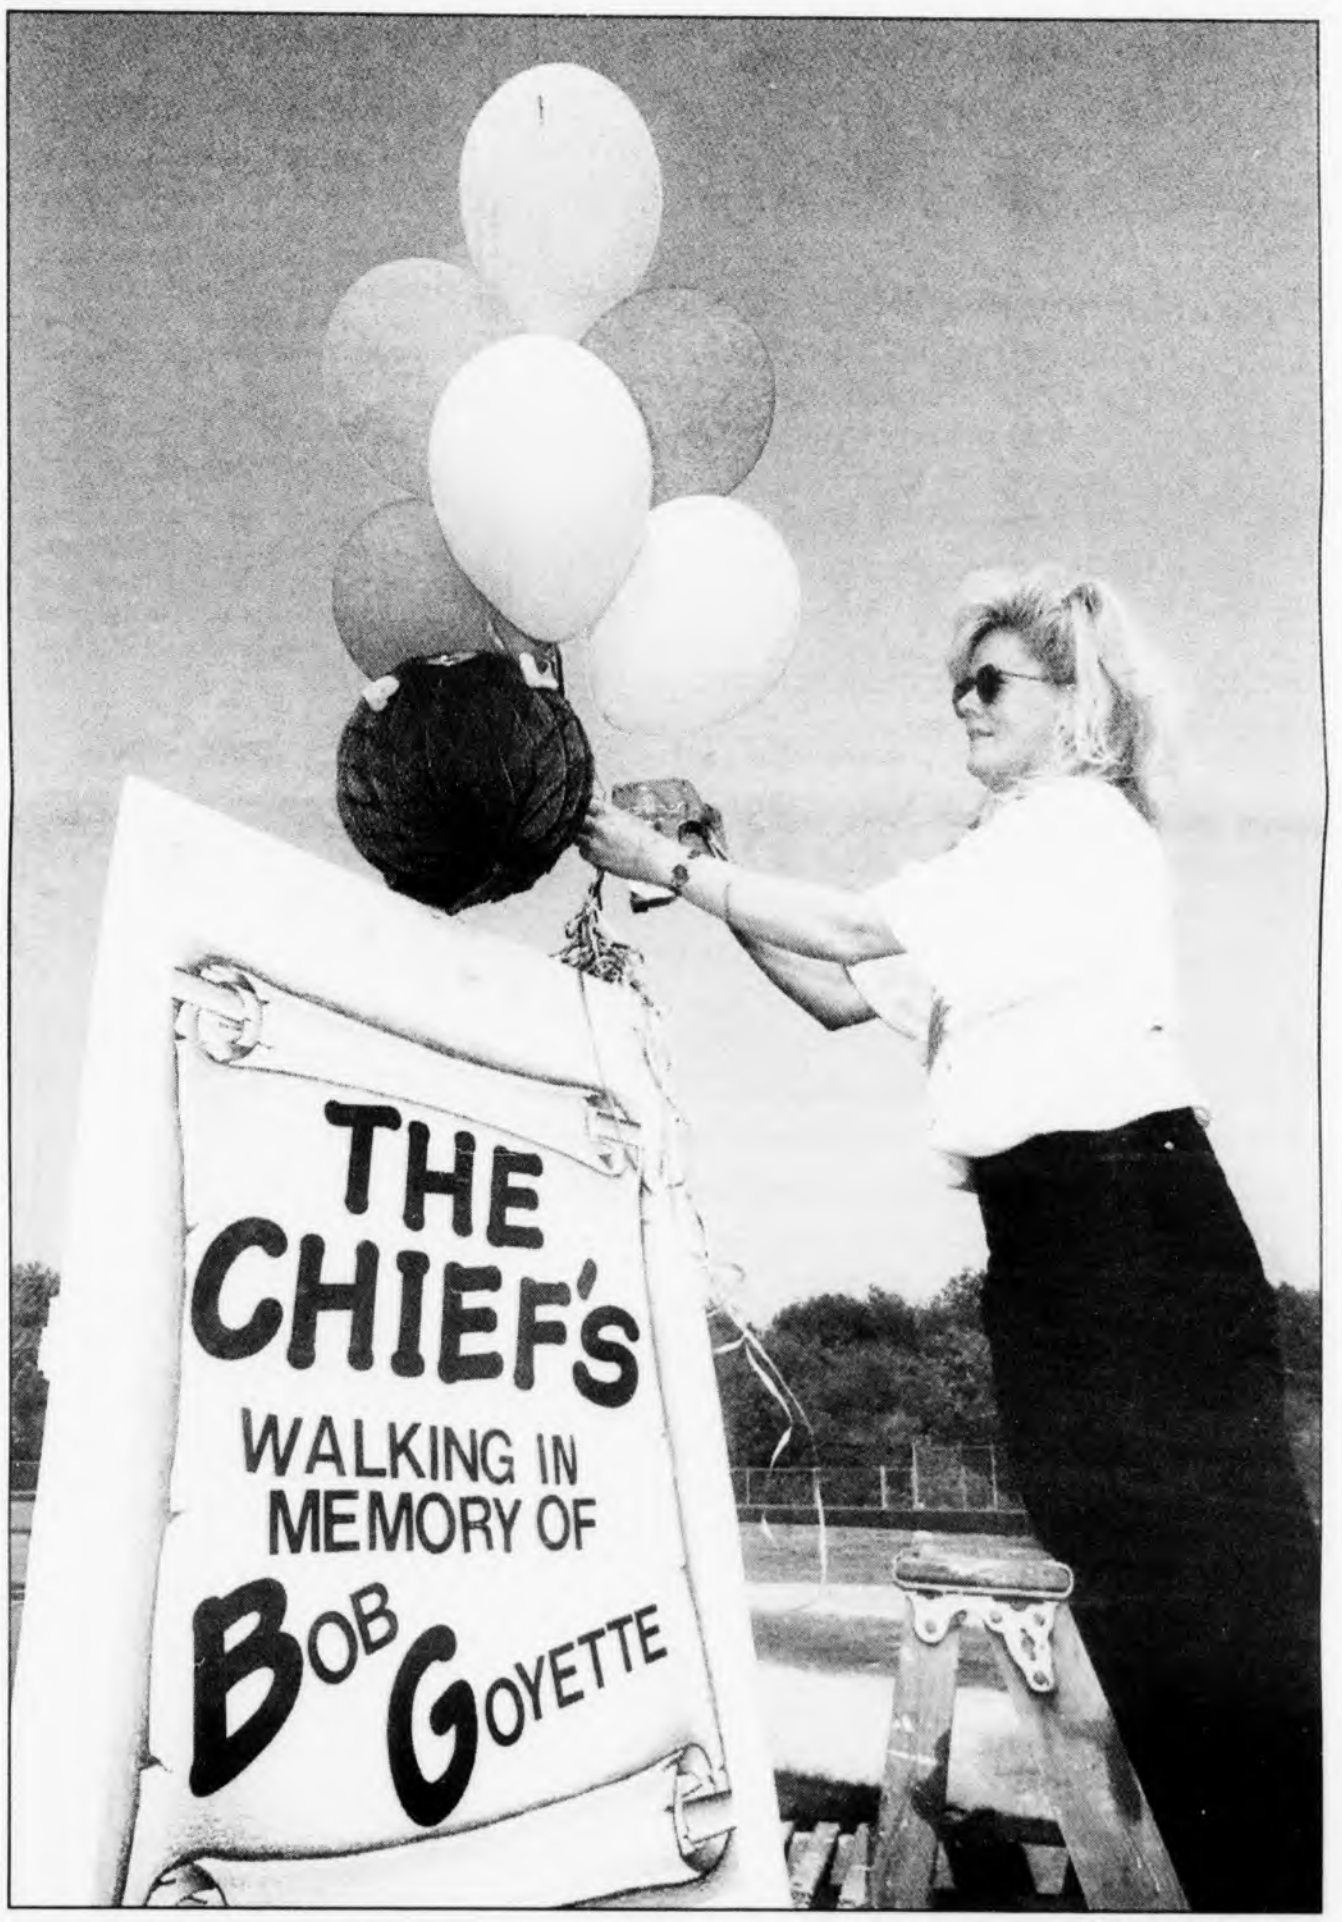
Cohasset has a new library director. Janet Husband of Braintree, the library director in Rockland, will take over the reins at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library July1.

She will replace Richard Hayes who is retiring at the end of the month.

Husband, who holds a bachelor of arts in English from the University of Pittsburgh and masters in library science from Rutgers, said it was time for a change.



"It just seemed like the right time," she said. "And I couldn't resist the opportunity to work in such a supportive town and possibly help design a new library building."

During her 13-year tenure in Rockland, Husband said she key accomplishments were overseeing automation of the library, expansion of the building and helping to start a private library foundation.

Fourteen candidates initially applied for the Cohasset position but library trustees reopened the search when their three initial

Health board hearing is Tuesday

The health board will hold a meeting on June 9 to discuss several violations by the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill. The meeting was delayed from May 12 so CHL-attorney John Beling could respond to efforts by the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) to persuade the health board to CHL's site assignment.

CHL is also under siege on another front. Building Inspector Robert Egan has filed a complaint against CHL in Quincy District Court to uphold his decision to shut down the facility permanently due to a permit violation. CHL has ignored the shut down order and remained open, and is suing town in land court to overturn Egan's decision. A hearing on whether the town can initiate criminal proceedings is scheduled for June 4

Train mitigation summit slated

Selectmen and the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee will meet in the selectmen's chambers at 7:30 p.m., Monday June 8 at town hall to discuss the "Air, Noise and Vibration Impacts of the Greenbush Commuter Rail Line," a report prepared by environmental consultants Tech Environmental Inc. of Waltham.

The report, which cost $11,800 and was authorized by town meeting, claims the MBTA grossly understated the impacts restoration of the train will have on Cohasset.

GREENBUSH RAIL LINE ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT MEETING

Monday, June 8, 1998
7:30pm
Cohasset Town Hall

On Monday evening, a meeting will be held with the Cohasset Selectmen and the Train Mitigation Committee to discuss the environmental impacts of the Greenbush Rail Line.

This meeting will also be televised on local cable channel 3.

History committee resignations

Selectmen accepted the resignations of Lot Bates and Robert M. Davenport from the committee on town history Monday night. The committee which is charged with producing the third volume of the town's history now has about a dozen members.

Member Molly Hochkeppel said it has been difficult to get a quorum with such a large committee.

Sewer forum is tonight

The sewer commission is conducting a forum at 7:30 p.m. tonight (June 4) in the town hall auditorium to answer questions and provide an update on the north and central Cohasset sewer projects. All residents are encouraged to attend.

Soccer club concession okayed

Selectmen granted a request from the Cohasset Soccer Club to use part of the storage shed on Milliken Field as a concession stand. They stressed the area around the shed must be kept clean.

No more Monday nights

Starting with their July 14 meeting, selectmen will meet on Tuesday rather than Monday nights. The switch in meeting nights is more convenient to a majority of the board, selectmen said this week.

Cable-TV public hearing

Town Manager Mark Haddad said this week he has slated Wednesday, Sept. 16 for a public hearing on renewal of the town's cable-TV license.

Beach, dump stickers on sale

Your beach and RTF permits expired May 31. Beach and RTF stickers are on sale at the town hall on the following schedule: Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Thursday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are 2 for $65 and for a sole resident $33.

Beach and RTF stickers will be on sale at the Recycling Transfer F[illegible] ty on weekends between the hours of 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. and noon to 3:30 p.m. Child care provider stickers will not be on sale at the RTF and are available at the town hall only. You will need vehicle registrations or, if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Permits now being issued will expire May 31,1999.

Relay for Life touches home for many

Event expected to raise $35,000

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

While their names like "G-Force II," "The Chiefs," and "Chatty's Team" couldn't be more different — their goal was the same.

The hundreds of area residents who gathered at the middle/high school track Friday and Saturday got involved by helping to put an end to cancer through a special fund-raiser, the Relay for Life in Cohasset.

"It's so uplifting," said Doris Goyette of Scituate, whose husband succumbed to the disease in March. "It makes us feel better about the whole situation. It makes us feel we're doing something to help him even though he's gone."

Goyette's team "The Chiefs" was made up of 33 family members and friends in honor of Robert A. Goyette, a Cohasset police officer for many years who later served as chief of police in Ayer and Southboro, Ma. and Yarmouth, Me.

This was the second annual 24-hour Relay for Life in Cohasset sponsored by the Southeastern Mass. Regional Center of the American Cancer Society at the high school track. This year's event is expected to raise upwards of $35,000 — $10,000 more than last year's — money which will support the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, and service to patients and their families.

"It makes us feel better about the whole situation. It makes us feel we're doing something to help him even though he's gone."

DORIS GOYETTE OF SCITUATE

The Relay for Life began in 1985 when surgeon Dr. Gordon Klatt of Tacoma, Wash., an American Cancer Society volunteer, ran and walked a local track for 24 hours. Since then, the Relay for Life has grown to be the signature event of the American Cancer Society raising millions of dollars in more than 1,300 communities across the country.

Last year, Clark Chatterton of Red Gate Lane was one of a few members of the organizing committee that hadn't had cancer. The event was slated for the brand-new high school track and the school athletic director had no idea at the time that this year he would be a "bonafide member," he said.

Chatterton said several months ago he received his "MVP" plaque for his volunteer efforts for the first Relay for Life in Cohasset.

"Two days later, I was in the hospital being operated on for cancer," he said.

There were two teams honoring Chatterton at the Relay for Life: "Clark's Team" and "Chatty's Team."

Megan Connolly, a junior, and Emily Libby, a sophomore at Cohasset High, organized a bunch of students for "Chatty's Team."

"He's (Chatterton) one of the nicest men, really thoughtful and he's a funny guy too," Megan said. "We were shocked by his illness and wanted to do something for him. He means a lot to us."

About 22 official relay teams — made up of just a handful to dozens of members from area towns — signed up for the Cohasset walk. Each participant obtained a minimum of $100 in pledges and paid a $5 registration fee which covered the cost of a T-shirt and pancake breakfast, explained Julie A. Carchedi, American Cancer Society regional executive director. Cancer survivors and students were exempt from the registration fee. The event revolved around team members taking turns walking laps for 24 hours. Registration opened at 3 p.m., Friday, May 29. Opening ceremonies got underway at 7 p.m. inside the high school gym due to a passing thunderstorm. That was followed by the survivors' "Victory Lap." The Luminaria Ceremony, which featured more than 1,000 candles lit in memory or in honor of those afflicted with cancer, took place about 9 p.m. The minimum contribution per luminary was $5, so that event alone raised upwards of $5,000.

Hap Pompeo of Ripley Road, captain of "Clark's Team" said the Luminaria Ceremony was very moving.

"Reading the names on the bags (containing the candles) as I walked around the track was really touching," Pompeo said.

The candles encircled the track and stayed lit throughout the night as walkers camped out in what resembled a tent city on the football field.

Several teams organized in memory of Dr. Gary Garber who lost his battle with cancer earlier this year.

Ed Lappen, captain of "G-Force II" in honor of his friend Garber, said he'll be back again next year. Lappen's son Ross Lieb-Lappen and his friend Matt O'Brien also led teams in memory of Garber.

Relay laps continued until 3 p.m. Saturday followed by the closing ceremonies and team awards. Teams camped enjoyed a festive atmosphere created by food, music and camaraderie.

The Relay for Life in Hanover is slated for June 19-20. For information on how you can help by participating in or volunteering at the Relay for Life, call Carchedi at the ACS office at 508-584-9600 ext. 232.

finalists withdrew from consideration for different reasons, including not wishing to relocate. Six new candidates applied during the second round, said trustees chairman Patience Towle.

Towle said the library trustees were impressed with Husband.

"She has a nice seamless local resume," Towle said. "She is very knowledgeable, has tons of experience and answered all our questions thoughtfully."

She said Husband's salary, which is being negotiated, will be in the high 40s.

Towle described Husband as "enthusiastic and excited for the task ahead of us regardless of what we do."

The library trustees are unanimous that the Paul Pratt Library building is too small to maintain services.

"We are definitely a library in search of a home," she said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who made the final decision under the Town Manager Act, said he thoroughly enjoyed working through the process with the trustees.

He said the three finalists — who also included Katie Baxter of Scituate, assistant director at the Hingham Public Library and Kathy Leahy of Hingham, children's librarian in Hingham — were all strong candidates.

"It was a nice dilemma we had," he said.

Husband is married and the mother of a 24-year-old daughter. Her husband is the librarian at Framingham State College.

She gave the retiring Hayes high marks.

"We all know and love Dick," said Husband, who knows Hayes through the Old Colony Library Network. "I hope I can continue with as much style as Dick did."

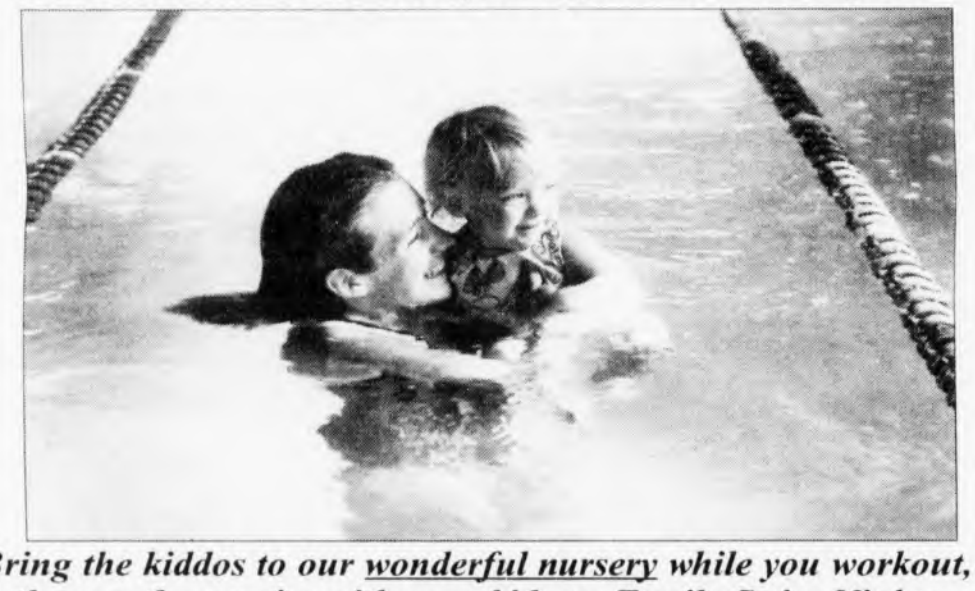
Blood drive is June 10



The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, June 10. The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main St., from 2 to 7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting will be provided from 3 to 6 p.m.

The Red Cross depends on regular donations to meet the ongoing need for blood and blood by-products.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if there are any questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

Research lab seeks Village location

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Kevin Ulmer appears to be a busy man these days. Besides his work on the health board, and his on-going plans to open the Lobster Lab on the Hagerty property, he also has to make a living. Ulmer makes his living as a biotechnology entrepreneur, and he is hoping to open a research laboratory at 8 Stagecoach Lane on the second floor of the former Greenhouse Restaurant.

Ulmer has asked the zoning board of appeals to grant him a variance to operate the lab in the downtown/Village business zone. But there is a wrinkle: Ulmer said there is a printing error in the latest version of the bylaws omitting references to research labs. In the previous version of the bylaws, research labs were allowed only in light industrial zones.

Pavonis Inc., is the name of a company formed by Ulmer a few years ago, but placed on hold while he worked on other commitments. Last summer, Ulmer obtained some seed money from investors to start a research facility focusing on the study of "Genomics", which refers to the use of information obtained from the study of human DNA by independent researchers and the government sponsored "Human Genome Project." If approved, Pavonis Inc., would open its first lab in the Village.

Many people are scared by the idea of human DNA testing, but as Ulmer points out, the research he would be performing is identical to work done at Beechwood Medical Center, Bay Coast Medical Center and SmithKline Beecham Clinical Laboratories, all located in the Village. The difference is these facilities take blood, skin or saliva samples and look at DNA to find the cause of health problems and diseases. Ulmer would use the same kinds of samples to develop information about DNA that could lead to new drugs or a better understanding of the workings of the human body.

He hopes the zoning board will approve the variance based on the similar uses already present in the Village.

Governments and private investors are pouring billions of dollars into DNA research in the hope of finding the next great drug or developing some major medical breakthrough.

Although laboratories are restricted to the industrial zone, there is no suitable office building with lease space available for a laboratory.

"At first I thought the zoning would be no problem, but then I found that research facilities and laboratories are only allowed in the light industrial zone," Ulmer said. "That area is made up of landfills and mulch piles, but no suitable office space for this use."

Ulmer wanted to place a large research facility on the former Webb Norfolk Conveyor property off Route 3A, but could not find an investor willing to put up the money.

Ulmer also pointed out that residents approved the lobster lab, which will be the site of biological research by students looking at things like lobster DNA. The lobster lab is in a light industrial zone, located on the edge of a residential zone near the harbor.

The sewer commissioners have also already approved a permit allowing the lab to produce 330 gallons per day of flow until the central Cohasset sewer expansion is completed.

Ulmer admits that many people are afraid of DNA research, mostly because they don't understand it.

"One of the great concerns people had about recombinant DNA is that there is a hazard of creating horrible biological constructs or 'Frankensteins'," he said. "In the 1970s there was a self-imposed moratorium by biologists on DNA applications."

But in the present, DNA research is common. Governments and private investors are pouring billions of dollars into DNA research in the hope of finding the next great drug or developing some major medical breakthrough. And this is just the kind of research Ulmer would conduct at his lab, if approved. He would use his seed money to purchase DNA testing and sequencing equipment, and to hire a small staff to assist him.

And rather than producing a genetically engineered race of monsters, DNA research has led to astounding scientific breakthroughs.

"The technology itself is neutral," Ulmer said. "It's really all about how people use it."

National Public Radio recently reported that a group of Canadian Scientists transplanted human DNA into a fruit fly, extending the creatures life by 40 percent with no side effects. One of the scientists on the project said the research may lead to techniques of allowing humans to live without disease until they die of natural causes.

"Pharmaceutical companies have reoriented their research because of DNA research," Ulmer said. "They are now looking at the causes of diseases and developing drugs for that, rather than developing drugs that treat just the symptoms. By looking at causation of disease, companies can develop drugs tailored to the cause of each person's disease."

But Ulmer is also hoping to benefit the town financially with his lab.

"To me, if I have to pay taxes on the business, I'd like to pay them to Cohasset," Ulmer said. "The town has little industrial taxes coming in. Everyone has been trying to find out how to revitalize the Village. This could help."

If the project is rejected, Ulmer said he would be forced to locate the lab in Scituate or Hingham and pay taxes to those towns.

Billy Maich scholarship established

A new permanently endowed scholarship, named after former Norwalk, Ct., resident Billy Maich, has been established by his family at the Francis Ouimet Scholarship Fund. The scholarship will be presented annually to a Ouimet Scholar from Wollaston Golf Club in Milton. Maich and his wife, Marie, now reside in Hallandale, Fla.

"We're delighted to announce this award in the name of Mr. Maich, which was contributed so generously by his son, Peter (Maich of Cohasset). Mr. Maich and his sons Peter and Paul have shared a lifelong love of golf, caddying and helping young people, and this award helps perpetuate this special feeling they have," said Steve Buckley, Ouimet Fund president.

Peter Maich, who is a 1969 graduate of Notre Dame and Wollaston member, is also a member of the Board of Directors of The Ouimet Fund. He is chairman of The Fund's Donor Development Committee, which has overseen a tremendous increase in these permanently endowed scholarships. Peter explained that caddying was very important to his father, who had grown up as a caddie at Longshore Country Club in Westport, Conn., in the 'Twenties. His father caddied for Gene Sarazen as a young man and also helped support his family during the depression as a caddie. The first Billy Maich scholarship will be presented in the fall of 1998.

Conway Honors Local Builders

Jack Conway & Co. recently presented their Community Builders Award to Mark Winchester and Stephen Bjorkland, who have been partnering to build and rehab residential properties throughout the South Shore for nearly five years. They take pride in a superior finished product, with all the "little extras," and have built a reputation for consistently high quality.

"What makes Mark and Steve a pleasure to work with," said Ralph Grassia, manager of Jack Conway & Co.'s Cohasset office, who has marketed several of Mark and Steve's projects, "is that they're always available to answer questions, work with buyers, and customize their properties according to market needs."

Conway - Cohasset Realtor Mary Ellen Neagle, who works closely with both builders, agrees. "They give their home buyers the peace of mind of knowing that their house has been built with pride, care, and the highest degree of craftsmanship."

EPA to revise pollution study on Greenbush

rates the pollution benefits of rail restoration they've long touted, officials in both Cohasset and Hingham have grave concerns about what they call major inaccuracies in the report.

"I was astonished to find numerous mathematical and other errors in the EPA report, which cast great doubt on its utility," said Hingham's Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

Despite the error, Brennan said the EPA had the right figures for the numbers of cars the train will take off the road, and used very conservative estimates on other issues. Even should the train trip error indicate that the rail emissions should be doubled, Brennan said the pollution caused by the train would be a minimal problem. Brennan also noted that the EPA's mistake is not as far off track as the Technical Resources for Environmental Quality (TREQ) emissions study undertaken by Cohasset resident Kevin O'Keeffe in 1995. Brennan said that report overestimated the train's pollution by 600 to 800 percent and underestimated the pollution caused by cars by using emission figures based on new cars built in 1995. Brennan said environmental studies on pollution normally take into account an average nationwide fleet of automobiles in use including cars built 10 to 20 years ago.

Ted Lento, Greenbush project manager for the Army Corps of Engineers, said he has been told by the EPA to ignore the current report until a new one is released.

Macmillan said there are other glaring errors in the EPA report. In estimating that 1,300 cars would be removed from the road, the EPA assumed wrongly that all the cars would have traveled the 56-mile round-trip journey all the way from Greenbush in Scituate, Macmillan noted.

"I find this disturbing," he said. "I feel sorry for the consultant who put together the report, because it's going to be a major embarrassment."

He said the study falsely portrays vehicle trips into Boston while "making it look like the train will travel one way into Boston on the wings of angels."

A report prepared for Cohasset on the issue of air quality by Peter Goldberg of Tech Environmental Inc. found fault with the MBTA and EPA findings, particularly with the degree of impact the project would have on abutters and other residents regarding noise, vibration and air quality issues, according to Macmillan.

He said the EPA has been notified about these concerns, which have captured the attention of the federal agency. A meeting to discuss the matter will be scheduled after June 20.

In the meantime, MBTA officials are considering the EPA findings a shot in the arm for the project. "We're thrilled with the study's findings, but it's what we've been saying for three years," Brennan said. "It's somewhat anti-climactic for us."

But Macmillan said in the long run, the EPA errors will hurt the MBTA and the project.

"The study will give a false boost, and I predict it won't be long before the EPA backtracks and that the Army Corps of Engineers (the lead federal agency reviewing the project) gives it short shrift," he said. "There's absolutely no way diesel rail is an environmental plus. This is one boost which will take the air out of Andrew Brennan's balloon."

Brennan said MBTA officials will meet with the Army Corps of Engineers next Friday to discuss the corps recent report which takes issue with the transit authority's ridership estimates in the draft environmental impact study. Brennan said he's confident that the MBTA will be able to address all of the corps concerns. "They're saying there is another way to do the ridership estimates and there is probably 50 more ways to do it.," he said. The question is will another way to do it give different results? And is it worth spending hundreds of thousands of tax payer dollars to find that out?"

Scituate selectmen will address the issue June 23, and Cohasset selectmen will discuss the EPA report next Monday.

Charles Chittick of Hingham, a member of the MBTA advisory committee, said the Goldberg report discusses issues which effect quality of life in a major way.

"In light of the Cohasset selectmen's reaction to the study, if they've got these problems, then Hingham has them in spades."

That report stated that an increase in nitrous oxide emissions from the train would increase summertime ozone levels.

"For air quality, ozone is the principal public health problem in Massachusetts," the report said. The study also stated sleep disruption from train noise would be greater than the MBTA said it would be.

"Rather than getting closer to the day the MBTA will sling its first silver shovel (to begin the project), (the proposal) seems to be moving further into the future," Macmillan said. "If the MBTA report is as bogus as it appears, this could be the beginning of the end, especially where the premise of Greenbush restoration is that diesel rail will improve air quality."

Dump to take center stage at hearing Tuesday

(today) in Quincy District Court.

The health board meeting was originally scheduled to discuss what steps CHL-owner Paul Barry should take to remove 7,800-square-feet of material illegally placed in a section of the landfill not approved for dumping. At 7:30 p.m., CHL will go over its plans with the health board. At 8 p.m., McNabb will present what he believes is overwhelming evidence for the health board to rescind CHL's site assignment.

The site assignment is the chief document that allows CHL to operate a landfill in Cohasset. The health board can rescind the site assignment if there is evidence that CHL poses a significant risk to human health. McNabb claims the evidence is clear that CHL is posing a risk to human health. However, CHL disputes those claims. McNabb points to numerous wetlands violations, material placed in areas without a landfill permit, tons of excess material on the slopes, and the landfill's illegal presence in the water authority district.

A former landfill owner failed to file a special permit in the county Registry of Deeds in 1976, which meant the permit was never valid according to state law. Without that permit, CHL cannot legally operate a landfill in town, especially in the water protection district, which was created in 1988. CHL had claimed "grandfathered" status because that is the only way a landfill can operate in the district. But without the valid permit, CHL could not claim that status and Egan ordered the landfill closed last January. CHL appealed that decision, but the zoning board upheld Egan's shut-down order.

If the health board decides to rescind the site assignment, it must hold public hearings. McNabb said he will urge the members of the health board to vote to rescind the site assignment at Tuesday's meeting, and schedule a hearing for July 7.

"I want the health board to vote right then and there," McNabb said. "I want them to stop waffling around on this and either put up or shut up. We know we [SAFE] have given the health board more than enough information to do this."

Joseph Osgood School move

The Joseph Osgood School Move Committee is looking for volunteers to help with the move to the new school. To save money, volunteers will be responsible for the packing and unpacking of classrooms and various offices, although the physical move of boxes will be handled professionally. Specifically, the committee is looking for volunteers on the following dates:

Packing of classrooms and offices at Joseph Osgood, Aug. 10 and 11 (Monday and Tuesday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Unpacking at new school, Aug. 27 and 28, (Thursday and Friday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Free baby-sitting will be provided. If you can help out, call Sarah Markert at 383-6124 or Cassandra Rioux at 383-2856 to sign up.

Harborfest steps off this weekend

By Bob Martin
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We hope that you will come and enjoy the Cohasset Harborfest weekend!

There should be some event during the weekend which will appeal to everyone.

The 70the Anniversary Celebration of the Joseph Osgood School will be a highlight. Be sure to visit the tents on the Common. Center Stage will feature the production "Grease" by various age groups of the South Shore School of the Performing Arts Friday afternoon as well as the Cohasset High School chorus at 2:15 p.m. Friday. Schedules will be posted at the stage and around town. The Center Stage is sponsored by the Cohasset Playhouse Associates.

The Luminaria at 8 p.m. Friday evening will be dedicated to those Cohasset residents who have passed away in the last year. Please join us for this beautiful ceremony.

The Ice Cream Festival will be held both Friday and Saturday afternoons to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry.

You can support the Teen Center by attending the Pancake Breakfast Saturday morning which is sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary Club. The Teen Center Speed Pitching Emporium is always a big draw for prospective additions to the Red Sox lineup.

The Cohasset Yacht Club is the sponsor of the Blessing of the Fleet and the Cohasset Clergy Association will preside. I assume that there will be silent prayers that the dredging of the harbor will finally be a reality in the next year.

The Harborfest Parade will kick off at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, after the Blessing of the Fleet, under the sponsorship of VFW Post 9146. The Harborfest Band which was the brainchild of The Rev. Ed Atkinson, will march under the direction of Roger Whitely. A special thanks to Steve Biagini who teaches at the Deer Hill for his efforts in whipping our band musicians into shape. Steve also has to be credited with the Deer Hill Fife and Drum Section which will be marching in the parade with the Historical Society Unit.

Thanks to all who have contributed to our weekend in any way and we hope that you will have a ball.

1998 Harborfest Schedule

PICTURE THIS

Name: Elinor Whitney Kennedy

Occupation: Retired Osgood School teacher.

Goal: To reach the top run of the ladder in life and at 96, I'm almost there.

Best vacation: Cape Blomidon, Nova Scotia.

Best day of your life: Our 50th wedding anniversary.

Biggest worry: If I'm going to make it!

Favorite holiday: Thanksgiving.

Favorite season: Spring.

Favorite TV show: "Outdoor Life."

Favorite movie: "Gone With the Wind."

Favorite book: The writings of Helen Hayes.

Favorite junk food: Popcorn.

Dumbest thing I've ever done: When I was a little girl, my teacher made me stand in the corner for talking to the boys and my mother came in and caught me.

Person you'd most like to meet: Maya Angelou.

Pet peeve: People who talk out of turn.

AROUND TOWN

PURE GOLD

Rose and Joe Dooley, formerly of Doane Street, were married in Cambridge on June 5, 1948. You can do the math! They celebrate their golden anniversary tomorrow and are back in town for the happy event.

Their seven children put on an early surprise party for them on Saturday, May 16 on Cape Cod. The Dooleys now live in Dennis and spend their winters in Naples, Fla.

In attendance at the party were numerous family and friends, 13 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

SUITCASES FOR KIDS

We think that almost all of Cohasset knows Katherine Stanton, she is a prominent lady in our town! She has a job as a Foster Care reviewer with the DSS, something she has done for the last six years. Well, DSS has a need! It is called "Suitcases for Kids" — each year the DSS works with 10,000 foster children statewide, most are moved 10 to 14 times in their young lives. Often the children have little to their name other than a trash bag to move their belongings. If you have a suitcase (any size), a duffle bag, gym bag or backpack — anything along those lines would help — please give Katherine a call. Her telephone number is 383-0944, her address is 30 Clay Spring Road. She can even arrange to pick up your donation! Make a child's day a little bit brighter! At the same time you might thank Katherine for all of the good that she does for everyone!

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Cliff and Peg Dickson, who turned 75 and 70 May 8 and 9. It was a wonderful weekend for them as their daughters (Lee and Kelly) and good friend Deb Grecci orchestrated a wonderful surprise party for them. Knowing the whole town would want to celebrate, the girls decided it had already been done when Cliff retired from the fire department, so they chose to keep it just "family." Cliff and Peg's "kids" came from all over for this major event (you may remember that this was also the weekend that the Boeing 737s were grounded, therefore some additional efforts were necessary).

Jamie and Shannon Klinker, who were flying in from the West Palm area, decided to rent a car due to their late arrival. We were in the midst of our 11 days of rain, so Jamie got a little bit lost — he stopped at a gas station in Hingham and asked a limo driver to direct them to Cohasset — the driver turned out to be George Dunlap from Beechwood (who has known Cliffie for many years), so he directed them right to their destination (they thank you, George).

Joe Hutchinson came up from Miami, and Cindy Meyerholz and her new fiancé, Jim Steiner, came from Long Boat Key.

Jay Piepenbrink came down from Wenham to emcee the party for his godparents, and Robert, Kelly's husband who had just flown in from London on business, recorded all on video.

Jim Graham, Lee's husband, prepared the music; he did a great job, everything from Garth Brooks to Glenn Miller. Aunt Tootsie had a wonderful time! She contributed some priceless pictures that the girls assembled to create a timeline for their parents from the early '40s to the current day (naturally boats, dogs and kids were included in every shot!).

The girls want to thank the Legion and the Silent Chef for coming to their rescue at the last minute when the Log 'n Line closed one week before the event. Kelly and Lee know that it turned out better than they could have hoped for.

Peg told them, "This I'll remember for the rest of my life." And Cliff smiled his agreement. Again, happy belated birthday, Cliff and Peg!

Mari Doggett, 13, of Orem, Utah poses with her grandfather, Tom Doggett of Cohasset at the barn raising celebration of the John and Priscilla Alden House in Duxbury.

SPREAD THE CHEER

Have you missed seeing Shirlie Laidlaw walking around town lately? We sure have! Her smile cheers everyone up! Anyway, Shirlie is now residing at the Elizabeth Catherine Rest Home, and would love to hear from you! Her new address is: Shirlie Laidlaw, Elizabeth Catherine, 27 Front St., Weymouth Landing, MA 02188. Spread the cheer!

MAKING WAVES

Congratulations to all of the swimmers who participated on the Weymouth Waves Swim Team for the 1997-98 season!! Special congrats to four Cohasset swimmers who received special honors — Reed Dickinson (Male Swimmer of the Year); Christina Daniels (Female Swimmer of the Year); Nick Zappalo (Rookie of the Year); and Kayvon Tehranian (unsung Hero).

Jennifer Plante

GOOD NEWS TO REPORT

Jennifer M. Plante received a Master of Fine Arts degree from Columbia University on May 20. As part of her requirement, she acted in multiple roles in the production of "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" at La MaMa Theatre in New York City. This production has been chosen to open the International Student Theatre Festival in Berlin, Germany in June.

Jennifer is a 1991 graduate of Cohasset High and received a BA degree in English and Drama from Tufts University in 1995.

She is the daughter of Maria and Patrick Plante, who were in New York City last week to celebrate Jennifer playing the lead role of the Governor's Wife on her 25th birthday!

50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

The Dooley family had a great 50th Wedding Anniversary Party for Roseann and Joseph Dooley Saturday, May 16; Rose and Joe's children held a surprise party on the Cape (where they now reside) attended by the couple's six children, their spouses, 12 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild, along with many friends and relatives. It was a true surprise for Rose and Joe, and everyone had a great time celebrating this wonderful milestone! Happy anniversary from all of us, too! We miss seeing you walking all over town!

BUSY TIMES AHEAD

Renee Prisble received her BFA from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. She has a very busy summer ahead with a piece in a show of contemporary cast iron art at a gallery in Chicago. She also has been accepted to the sculpture parks in Franconia and New York Mills, Minn., as well as a teaching assistant position for two weeks at Ox Bow Art Center in Michigan.

COHASSET BAND MEMBERS

Remember when I told you about the musical group, the "Flying Squirrel," appearing in Hull last week? Well, I mentioned the two gents in the group who reside in Hull, but forgot to include the two awesome musicians from Cohasset! They are — drum roll please — Andy Kuhn and David Aronson. They got a fantastic crowd that night, and are soon to be featured at an Aids benefit in Harvard Square — stay tuned for details!

BARN RAISING

Polly Doggett and her granddaughter, Mari, arrived back from a vacation in Bermuda in time to join Grampa Tom at the barn raising of the John Alden House in Duxbury. Tom was one of 30 volunteers who assisted int he raising of the post and beam constructed barn on the Alden House property.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Changing tide on Greenbush

Following the ups and downs of Greenbush lately feels a lot more like a roller-coaster than a train ride. Just last week, it looked like the Army Corps of Engineers — the federal agency with jurisdiction of wetlands and historic districts — might derail the $285 million project entirely. A report the Corps released, prepared by a consulting firm, complained the MBTA hadn't done its homework.

The report described the MBTA's ridership and environmental impact projections and analysis of alternatives for Greenbush as "sketchy and flawed."

This week, the Environmental Protection Agency — another federal entity — tells us that Greenbush diesel trains won't pollute as much as the cars it will remove from the highway.

But on the surface, it appears that the EPA's study, nine months in the making, may also be "flawed."

For one thing, it based its figures on 12 train trips a day, not the 24 planned for Greenbush. Whether the additional 12 trips omitted from the report could tilt the scales the other way is best left up to the environmental engineers to determine.

And now little Cohasset might be getting into the fray with longtime train opponent Hingham and Scituate, which is less than happy with its negotiations over the proposed layover site in that town.

A new report prepared by a consultant hired by the town of Cohasset is very unsettling.

Everyone seems to be weighing in on the Greenbush issue. Except, of course, the MBTA. The agency has been all too quiet and should be out in front of these issues, especially if it wants to see the Greenbush line become a reality. The agency's silence, or lack of a proactive stance, is allowing the opposing side to control the debate and that could be swaying people against the train.

The Cohasset report concludes in its Environmental Impact Report, the T grossly underestimated the impact of locomotive noise and vibration impacts on homes near the rail line and misrepresented the potential air quality impacts of the Greenbush Line by overstating claimed reductions in motor vehicle emissions.

For example, the report said the T ignored the impact of sleep disruption that will occur in homes along the rail corridor through the use of a 24-hour average noise measure.

As Cohasset Mitigation Committee Chairman Thomas Gruber said "your gut tells you when a cannon goes off there's a lot of noise" but the net result is small when averaged over 24 hours.

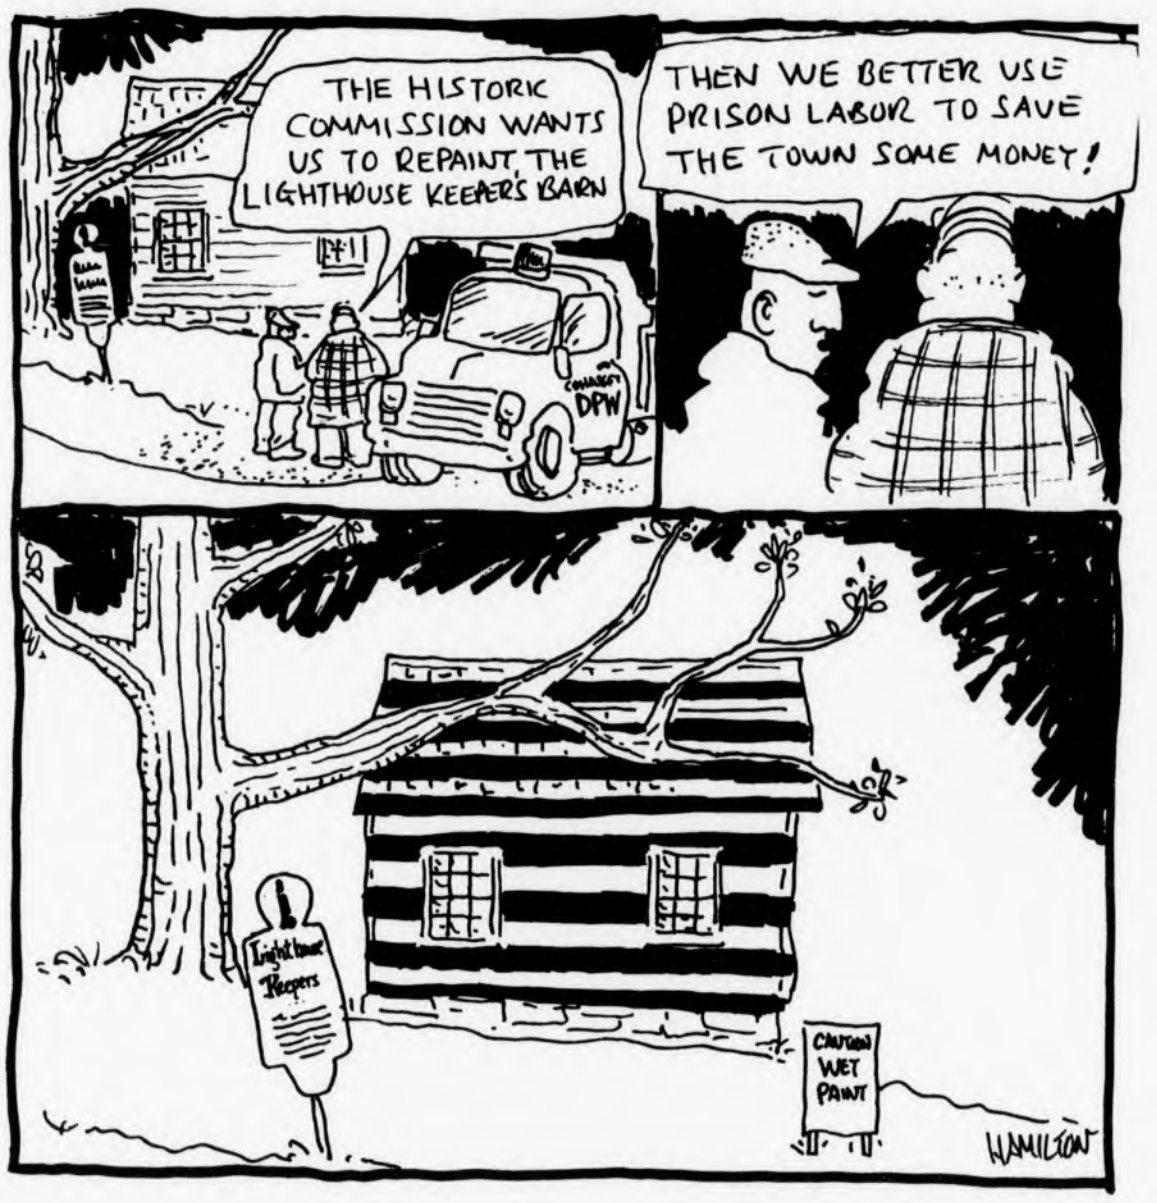
Yet the T plans no noise mitigation in homes and businesses beyond 50 feet when noise disruption will occur in a corridor 800-feet wide, according to the report.

The new report is aptly described by Gruber's fellow mitigation committee member Martin Corry as "the smoking gun" propelling him toward asking Cohasset selectmen to join with other towns in actively opposing the train.

Mr. Gruber takes a more conservative approach but one that is nonetheless a sign of increasing uneasiness about Greenbush.

"I don't think the mitigation process has had the results we'd like it to have. We need a new approach here," Mr. Gruber said. "We must protect the citizens and get what we need, so we have a life after the train."

Here at the Cohasset Mariner we believe citizens have a right to safe, convenient public transportation — the opportunity for which might be lost if "Greenbush dies of its own weight," as state Sen. Robert Hedlund said this week.



If we're getting the wrong impression from all the facts and figures being tossed about by environmental consultants and engineers — it's time the T stood up and answered the hard questions. There are those of us who still believe the last segment of the Old Colony rail revival is the best means to reduce congestion on Routes 3 and 3A. Few of us want to continue enduring the endless traffic and long and useless delays trying to get to points North on any given morning.

We're not sure how many more black eyes Greenbush can take before the beleaguered proposal is down for the count and the only transportation alternative most of the South Shore is left with is that gridlock on Routes 3 and 3A.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Unsupervised dogs not appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to call attention to dog owners, especially those in and around the Linden Drive area. Some dog owners seem to forget their dog ownership responsibilities, more importantly, they forget that their dog may be their best friend, not mine. I want to go on record by stating I do not dislike dogs or for that matter any pet, providing its owner cares for them. I do not have a pet due to my unwillingness to care and provide for it.

On occasion I have witnessed a new pup, while leashed, with its owner strutting their stuff through the neighborhood. Soon after the leash seems to disappear, the owner stops strutting and the pup starts squatting. The owner's best friend seems to find his way into my yard leaving his trademark for me to dodge when mowing the lawn.

I am lucky enough to have neighbors who do care for their dogs. They are leashed, and restricted by fences and electrical barriers. These owners have excepted their responsibility and for them I am thankful.

To the owners of the black French poodle, I am grateful for your ability to keep he/she so manicured, but the animal's deliverance in my yard seems to indicate you're not feeding him/her properly. Change the diet!

To the brown and black beagle who leaves his trademark on my property, I forgive you. It is your owner who has failed in his/her obligation to care for you. To the owners of the white German shepherd, who seems to enjoy attacking and putting others in fear. Twice I have been attacked by this animal. These incidents occurred in the presence of the dog owners, once in my yard and once on Sandy Beach. I am hopeful that the owners will now take steps to either cage this wild beast or use a leash before his fangs penetrate an innocent victim. Throw him a bone every once in a while, will ya?!

These dog owners I speak of, take care of your friend. I don't have the time or patience nor do I possess the courage to withstand a vicious attack. Some dog owners consider their animals to be part of the family or their best friend. Treat them as such! I am sure that you would not want my best friend (and he is not a dog!) to leave his trademark in your yard.

I am sickened at cleaning and having to deposit your animal's waste. Your lack of care should be carefully scrutinized. It is time you took advice from the dog owners who do care for their animals. If that's too difficult, read "Dick and Jane see Spot Run," a great story about two children who know how to care for a dog!

Paul Pratt Trustees' release report on library

For several years, the Library Trustees have been considering the future of the library, particularly as hobbled by the library building's size. We have been waiting for the results of the Facility Audit, received orally May 13, to be certain in which direction to proceed. We want to be sure that the selectmen are well informed about the Trustees' analysis of the situation and the course of action which we have adopted.

Summary

At a meeting May 16, the Library Trustees agreed that they:

1. Recognize that nostalgia and affection for Cohasset's Library of almost 100 years must not obscure the reality of the library's needs for both today and the foreseeable future.

2. Reluctantly, but firmly, abandon the idea that time, study or money can make the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building suitable for Cohasset's future use as a public library.

3. Recognize that the availability of the Joseph Osgood School, with excellent space and a central, visible location, is truly a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

4. Decide to move ahead with speed and determination to acquire adequate space in the Osgood School or on the Osgood property for Cohasset's Public Library.

5. Instruct the Long Range Planning Committee to seek funds for a feasibility study of the Osgood School for use by the library, and that the results of that study will permit the Trustees to ask Town Meeting, at its October meeting, for funds for working drawings suitable for construction bids.

Background

In 1903, the original library building was a gift to the town by Paul Pratt's daughter in his memory, on land donated by the Snow family. It was constructed for a population of roughly 2,700 before the general use of automobiles. An addition, in 1964, at no cost to the town, added about 2,300 square feet to the building's original 3,600 square feet and created a children's room, meeting room and back stairway.

About that time, Cohasset's library caught up with substantive changes in the philosophy of public libraries, moving from the library as a custodian of books and information, to that of the library as an active information center and service organization for its community. An extensive renovation, completed in 1978, added 40 percent more improved space at a cost of $203,000, and has served Cohasset well for 20 years.

Current situation

Cars and computers have now made this much-loved building inadequate for Cohasset's current and future library needs. Cars need parking spaces and computers need floor space.

In light of the current inadequacies of the library building, listed below, spending any significant money to conform this building to Massachusetts architectural access requirements would be foolish.

CURRENT INADEQUACIES OF THE PAUL PRATT MEMORIAL LIBRARY

General difficulties

- Too few bookshelves for current collection [shelves designed for 45,000 books; current collection of 53,000 books]
- Only 20 percent of the parking spaces required by Cohasset's Zoning By-law
- No meeting room
- Much of the building inaccessible for handicapped patrons or staff
- Children's area difficult to access for adults with babies or toddlers
- Circulation desk inappropriate for electronic record-keeping
- Inefficient layout for optimum staff supervision of library

No floor space for

- expansion of computer use by patrons and staff for reference use, either using CD-ROMs or on the Internet
- flexible response to future needs
- an audio-cassette and CD collection
- a videotape collection
- programs for children or adults
- young adults
- merchandising the "world within these walls," display cases for special collections
- expansion of the book collection
- consumer center
- Town historic material

Inadequate space for

- efficient book processing by staff
- stack browsing
- newspaper and magazine browsing
- reference librarian on the floor
- community bulletin board
- free public information material (tax forms, public service organizations, etc.)
- quiet study areas

Some of these inadequacies represent conscious decisions of the Trustees in the early 1970s, when the building renovation was planned. They were compromises geared to costs likely to be approved by Town Meeting. Priority was given to shelf space and staff work space at the expense of non-print collections (books-on-tape) and a room for meetings. The pastor of St. Anthony's was agreeable to library parking in the church's lot. Despite these economies, the renovation failed at the first Town Meeting to which it was presented, in keeping with general historic reluctance to invest in change.

Despite an established policy of the Trustees to limit the book collection to the space available, implementation of this policy has been extremely difficult. As bumper stickers in 1974 attested, "Our Books Are in a Bind!" — again.

The death knell to the Trustees' attempts of more than 30 years to fix-up/make-do at Cohasset's lovely old library has been the library world's conversion to computers. In the last several years, through perseverance and ingenuity, space has been found at the library to provide computers and terminals for records storage, circulation data and catalog information, but their design, location and ergonomics are far from ideal. There is no more space for additional computers for public use — and several more are definitely needed.

On May 13, the Long Range Planning Committee met with Stephen Devine of KFP Architects, Inc., which has submitted a draft report of a facilities study of Cohasset's buildings, including the library. The purpose of his study, done for the town, was to identify for several town buildings the nature and cost for each building, of projects related to building maintenance and to improved conformity to the Massachusetts Architectural Access Code. KFP, Inc., established priorities and costs over a 10-year time period. In addition for the library, KFP, Inc. considered whether the library building could be expanded, and at what approximate cost.

To improve accessibility, roughly $470,000 will be required. Major expenditures are for eliminating platforms on the children's level, and adding an elevator and two more bathrooms per floor. The various improvements for access will cut into already crowded space.

The most obvious expansion possibility for the building is squaring off the Southeast and Northwest corners of the building to provide only 2,000 square feet of the more than 4,000 square feet needed. Were this done, about 60 parking spaces would be required to conform to Cohasset's Zoning By-law. These spaces are estimated to cost about $260,000, without the cost of acquiring about one-third of an acre from the abutters on each side. This would mean that the entire lot would be asphalt — on land that abuts a wetland. One observer at this public meeting commented that "such an expansion would produce an ugly building on a sea of asphalt." After the expenditure of more than $1million, if this plan would work, the space provided would be neither enough nor efficiently organized, and would merely defer the obvious — that Cohasset needs a new library.

Trustees conclude that further consideration of renovations to the current library would be a waste of the public's time and money.

Editor's note: the trustees provided the Mariner with a copy of their report for publication.

Citizens group is a start

TO THE EDITOR:

Too bad the several thousand people whose pocketbooks are going to get thinner dealing with wastewater disposal didn't attend the Sewer Follies Symposium May 27 at the high school. Although far in the future is a comprehensive solution to the mess created by Title 5 and our penurious shortsightedness over the last two decades, the formation of an active and informed citizens group is a start. It deserves attention and support.

Although I got a little bored with the repeated homilies about working together to resolve the economic, environmental, regulatory and institutional issues, at least one attendee was oblivious to the message, and spoke in favor of "fierce independence" in the form of composting toilets and similar measures that everyone should adopt. I'm not in favor of the tyranny of forcing everyone to solve his or her own wastewater disposal problems when a group approach can be a far more effective protector of our environment and of our pocketbooks.

We heard a lot about the need to improve our data base as a step toward developing a comprehensive townwide plan. We also need a better mechanism for effective action, and I suggest a Wastewater Treatment Commission to take over from the Health Board and the Sewer Commission the responsibility and authority for determining the appropriate means of treatment for each of the many situations in our town (individual leaching fields, grouped leaching fields, individual or grouped mechanical systems, sewers connected to small or large central treatment plants, etc.) The Commission might consist of one selectman or person appointed by the selectmen, one person from the Sewer Commission, one from the Board of Health and two to four persons elected. The Health Board would continue its regulatory function, but would be relieved of planning and implementation. The Sewer Commission would busy itself with implementing whatever sewers and central treatment systems are determined by the Wastewater Treatment Commission and ratified by vote at town meeting.

We need to abandon the crippling philosophy of minimum possible sewering and the nonsensical idea that an adequate sewer system will ruin the town with excessive growth. Mechanical systems now are available that are capable of rendering almost any lot useable, so attempting to control growth by inadequate sewering is futile. Growth must be guided by zoning; sewers should be used wherever they are the environmentally- and economically-appropriate solution. Other solutions may be appropriate for those with large percable lots (and/or a tolerance for composting toilets).

We passed up the golden opportunity several years ago to have a heavily subsidized central treatment plant, at a time when an ocean outfall would have been allowed. Now we will have to find other ways to dispose of the treated and innocuous effluent from any additional treatment plant(s), so that a large central plant with its economy of scale may have to give way to several smaller and ultimately more costly plants. Our shortsighted penny-wise and pound-foolish behavior is not confined to sewer issues, as demonstrated often at town meetings. Nor should we lay all the blame for missed opportunity, inadequate action and unpopular results on our elected officials. Too many residents aren't paying attention, too many others are voting deliberately for least immediate cost to themselves.

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) put much effort into the symposium, and the result deserved standing-room-only attention.

Little things that make a house historic

A woman named Patricia Johanson has purchased Rocky Marciano's boyhood home on Dover St. in Brockton and plans to turn it into a "living museum" in honor of the former world heavyweight champ.

News item

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I figure that, at the rate we're going, by the year 2050 half the houses in the United States will be historic sites or museums and the rest of us will be living in a skyscraper in the Mohave Desert.

On second thought, the Mohave may well be declared an "area of critical environmental concern" by then and thus rendered off limits to human habitation.

But I digress . . .

Now, I'm not one to say Rocky doesn't deserve to have his boyhood home elevated to the status of an historic house.

If the old home of Amos Blanchard at 97 Main St., Andover, can be historic, why not Rocky's?

Amos was the first clerk of the Andover National Bank, a far cry from a world boxing championship.

The list of historic houses in Massachusetts and New England is long and, in some cases, difficult to understand.

Take the house at 83 Beals St., Brookline, where John F. Kennedy was born.

The Kennedys moved out when JFK was 4 years old and never looked back until it came time to spruce it up for history.

There are six towns in the Bay State and New Hampshire where houses have been retired in the name of Mary Baker Eddy, including 277 Main St., Amesbury, where she discovered Christian Science in 1866.

The others are in Swampscott and Stoughton in Massachusetts and Concord, North Groton and Rumney, N.H., where she lived from 1860 to 1862.

The John Paul Jones House Museum at 43 Middle St., Portsmouth, N. H., named for the naval hero of the Revolution, was the place where he boarded for a while as he waited for the ships Ranger and America to be fitted at the shipyard.

The house at 117 Cabot St., Beverly, was deemed historic after the merchant of the same name made his fortune as a privateer attacking and looting British shipping during the Revolution.

As a result, the end of the war found him "by far the most wealthy in New England."

The Longyear Family Museum at 120 Seaver St., Brookline, was originally built overlooking Lake Superior in Michigan, later dismantled and reassembled in the Boston suburb.

The Rebecca Nurse Homestead at 149 Pine St., Danvers, recalls a 17th century witch who was hanged in Salem.

Rebecca was 71 years old when three local girls threw fits and a doctor suspected witchcraft. The girls named Rebecca and two other women as the culprits.

Rebecca was arrested, found innocent, arrested again and finally hanged in 1692.

The Trask Home at 10 Union St., Manchester-by-the-Sea, was the residence of Abigail Hooper, who ran her own store, selling ships supplies like hardtack and rum to sailors in a day when other women stayed home and churned butter.

Later she married Capt. Richard Trask, who spent most of his time at sea — so why is it the Trask House and not the Hooper Home?

Arrowhead at 780 Holmes Rd., Pittsfield, is a shrine to the author Herman Melville, who wrote "Moby Dick" there, a hundred miles from the sea.

A structure known as the Old Stone House in Brownington, Vt., was believed to have been built in 1830 by the Rev. Alexander Twilight, the first black college graduate and the first black legislator in America.

And, not far away in Plymouth, Vt., is the birthplace and boyhood home of Calvin Coolidge, where he was sworn in as president by candlelight by his father, a justice of the peace.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Landfill hearing is Tuesday

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is to all my fellow Cohasset residents who agree that the time has come for Cohasset Heights Ltd. to once and for all close its doors.

Please come to the next Board of Health meeting at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, June 9 at the town hall. SAFE will ask the BOH to convene the Site Assignment Hearings for Cohasset Heights Landfill. If the board votes to convene these hearings, then the resulting process will be similar to, but much shorter than, what occurred two years ago when the BOH eventually voted to deny a site assignment for the "expansion" of the present landfill. CHL did appeal this decision, but his appeal was just recently denied.

The BOH has the authority to take another look at this Site Assignment and decide whether or not to keep it, amend it or rescind it. SAFE, among others, would present evidence to show that it should be rescinded. If the BOH does decide to rescind the site assignment, this will essentially shut down CHL. Yes, CHL will most likely appeal this decision. However, if history repeats itself, the town will prevail in court as it has done so every time in the past.

If you applaud the work SAFE has done in getting out the story on this landfill, this is the time to show your support. Not only does SAFE need your support but so does the Board of Health and other town officials who are willing to "step up to the plate" to get this process underway.

MBTA skewed its train data

TO THE EDITOR:

I read with much interest two headline stories in your May 28 issue regarding the controversial Greenbush rail project (Will Corps derail Greenbush plans? And Town's train report isn't pretty). They capture the current rain morass quite clearly.

When you read the Army Corps' report on the MBTA's documents, you frequently encounter comments like: "analysis has shortcomings," "Greenbush forecasts can be questioned for accuracy and reliability," "there are questions regarding the legitimacy of ridership," and "since the methodology and forecasts for Greenbush are questionable, we also question conclusions reached regarding project benefit and impacts."

After all this time (and millions of taxpayer dollars spent) we deserve better. What is also clear is that the MBTA skewed their data to promote the only alternative they ever seriously considered: at-grade diesel rail.

Adding insult to injury is the recent report delivered to the Cohasset Mitigation Committee by Tech Environmental, who concluded that the T has been less than honest in their assessment of the benefits of a train, particularly ridership, diesel air emissions, noise and vibration. Some of our town officials were surprised by these findings. They should not have been.

The Coastal Coalition, led by Nancy Buckley and Ilana Marks, helped by numerous volunteers, spent hundreds of hours dissecting the T's reports and studies. They published a 67-page response to the project. It should come as no surprise to those who have looked at the project in detail, that the Corps and Tech Environmental confirm what the Coastal Coalition said a few years ago.

It is my feeling that Greenbush is already dead but the administration is waiting for the election in November to cut it loose. For those doubters out there, take the time to read these reports. Then consider the new cost of the project ($285,000,000), which is surely not a final figure. Ask yourself if this is the kind of project you want your tax dollars spent on. With debt outstanding as the MBTA approaches $3 billion, we all need to be more skeptical of "pipe dreams" they are selling the general public.

Attendance at landfill meeting sought

TO THE EDITOR,

I wish to call the public's attention to the upcoming meeting of the Board of Health, June 9 at 7:30. I urge all interested residents to attend the meeting to show the Board our support for strong action in a move to close a particularly malodorous chapter in our local history - the operation of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

The landfill has been a blight on our immediate locale since it received its first permit to operate in the 1980's It is now time to close this misconceived hazard to our health and well being. While this action will not eliminate this threat from our midst - it will mean that the owners can no longer continue to receive debris and must begin the long process of properly shutting the facility down.

Only with enthusiastic and sustained public support for this course of action can we assist the Board in following this course. I urge all interested residents to attend this crucial meeting.

Shutting down landfill urged

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) has abused the privilege of operating a landfill, and must be shut down by the board of health. At the June 9 board of health meeting, at 8 p.m. in town hall, myself and other members of SAFE will request the board to vote that night to schedule a Site Assignment Hearing soon to rescind CHL's Site Assignment. I urge all Cohasset residents to attend this important meeting.

No one has a "right" to operate a landfill, which are by definition a potential threat to public health, safety and the environment. Landfills are classified as potential public nuisances by the Massachusetts legislature and the state courts – and can be closed down for "merely" violating environmental regulations or causing actual damage to the environment, as CHL has done.

CHL has admitted to illegally dumping more than 1,000 tons of waste into Area IV-B and has been shown to have dumped another 100,000 tons of waste illegally on the slopes of the landfill in violation of their DEP operating permit.

In the more than six months since CHL admitted to the illegal dumping in Area IV-B on November 18, the board of health has taken no enforcement action. The most appropriate action for the board to take is to order CHL to cease and desist all landfill operations. Then, and only then, Cohasset's long-running CHL nightmare will finally be over once and for all.

Bradley campaign shows strong support

The campaign of Assistant District Attorney Garrett Bradley continued to show strong support by turning in 526 certified signatures to the secretary of state.

Bradley attributes his strong show of support to the fact that he has knocked on the doors of thousands of voters in the district, talking about important issues that affect all residents of the Third Plymouth District. Bradley has focused his campaign on improving education, reducing the tax burden on working families and senior citizens, and working with local communities to make our streets safer. As an assistant district attorney in Plymouth County and a long-time resident of the district, Bradley brings a strong background of public service and local knowledge to the campaign for state representative.

For more information on the Garrett Bradley campaign, call 741-9998.

Hingham resident to manage Cutler campaign

State Representative candidate Josh Cutler today announced he has appointed Hingham resident Ann Marie Farrell as campaign manager.

A Hingham resident for more than 22 years, the 28-year-old Farrell is a graduate of the Hingham public schools and the College of the Holy Cross. She also earned a bachelor's degree in nursing from the University of Massachusetts. Farrell, a former case manager for Central Boston Elder Services, currently works as a registered nurse at the Boston VA Medical Center.

"I'm very proud to be associated with this campaign," says Farrell. "Josh Cutler sincerely cares about the South Shore and the issues that matter to people here."

Cutler is a democratic candidate for State Representative for the Third Plymouth District, which includes the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Cutler is running to bring a pro-active voice to the State Legislature on issues such as education reform, environmental protection and health care reform.

For more information on the Cutler Campaign, call (781) 749-3342 or visit the Cutler Campaign website at www.jcutler.com.

Jonathan Livingston Square off Rte. 3A is alive and well

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There is always a lot of talk about what can be done to revitalize the business community in the Village. And while activists are still seeking a solution to that dilemma, there are other parts of town where businesses are managing to thrive and attract a steady customer base. Jonathon Livingston Square is one of those places.

Situated on Route 3A across from the highly attractive Scituate Hill property formerly owned by Webb Norfolk Conveyor, the strip mall is host to a pleasant mix of small businesses. No one knows how Jonathon Livingston Square got its name. The rumor is that the builder was reading "Jonathon Livingston Seagull" by Richard Bach and was inspired to name the development after the book.

The current owners, brothers Tom Cummings of Wellesley and Paul Cummings of Springfield, have owned the development since Jan. 2, 1985. Tom Cummings said he bought the property from Jay Conant, and before that it was owned by a plumbing group which built and named the strip mall.

Cummings said he is quite happy with the development, especially considering the fact that a devastating fire in 1992 nearly put the development out of business. But Jonathon Livingston Square survived that fire and is now home to some healthy businesses on Route 3A.

"People sometimes look at business as a necessary evil, but local businesses provide taxes, jobs, services products and good citizens."

— DOMENIC MICARELLI COHASSET CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Only one store is currently vacant, and two new businesses, Lavita Tile and Maggie's Bakery, are planning to open soon. The business mix at Jonathon Livingston Square is diverse and interesting.

Jade Forest Kung Fu is one of the most respected martial arts studios on the South Shore. If you're looking for antiques, there is Cohasset antiques. There is also a yoga studio, The Yoga Center, a variety store, The Cohasset Food Mart, Tarzia Remodeling, and the developments oldest business, Cohasset House of Pizza.

Deborah Ryan has owned and operated the Cohasset House of Pizza for the past 20 years, although the original owner opened it 24 years ago. She said she has survived over the years by relying on a regular clientele interested in good food at reasonable prices.

Even though the businesses are located on busy Route 3A, Ryan said she is frequently surprised when a long-time resident enters the restaurant and asks her how long she's been open.

Domenic Micarelli is the owner of another Jonathon Livingston business, Christopher's Gallery, formerly known as The Artist's Son. His business specializes in good picture framing and fine art. He is also president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

Micarelli calls the stretch of Route 3A where he is located the "white knuckle zone" because people zip by the development much faster than the 50 miles per hour posted speed limit. He said owning a business on Route 3A is as challenging as owning a business in the Village or anywhere else.

"It's all what you make of it and what you do with your resources," he said. "We have to pay higher rents up here than down in the Village."

He said that although the businesses in Jonathon Livingston Square are not in competition with the Village, they would benefit from a revitalized Village as traffic passed by their location to reach the downtown.

"What's good for Cohasset is good for me," Micarelli said. "I have to answer to all my business constituents in my position with the Chamber."

He is also optimistic that any development on the 62-acre Webb Conveyor property would benefit all the businesses on 3A. Micarelli said he uses his position in the Chamber to help people understand the benefits of allowing the business community to thrive in Cohasset.

"People sometimes look at business as a necessary evil, but local businesses provide taxes, jobs, services products and good citizens," Micarelli said. "We provide food and skis and services. The person in line next to you at the supermarket may also be a local businessperson."

And a thriving, tax-paying business site is just what Jonathon Livingston Square is providing for the town. Cummings just installed a massive new septic system at the location and plans to stay in town for a good, long time.

Group wants the focus on big sewer picture

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The public must lead, not follow town officials to find fair ways to deal with Cohasset's wastewater woes.

That was the message at the controversial "Sewer Follies" forum Wednesday. According to Lisa Bumstead of the citizens group that spearheaded the event, the people have been frustrated by the failure of town boards to unite and come up with a comprehensive solution.

"The health of the entire town is at stake," she said. "This meeting is a call to action for every Cohasset citizen." To illustrate the urgency of the dilemma, she also challenged everyone in the audience to decide that night how they would answer the call.

"What is your call to action going to be?" she said. Bumstead compared the current predicament to a jigsaw puzzle and said people were trying to solve the puzzle without any idea "of how the finished puzzle should look." Her brief introduction was followed by presentations by nine experts.

About 300 people packed the auditorium at Cohasset High to hear the speakers dish up small sections of the "big picture." The reception was polite and at times enthusiastic even though the issues were controversial. For openers, none of the sewer commissioners accepted the invitation to attend the forum. The sewer board has been sharply criticized for its failure to work with the health board and for its role in a court settlement with the state. That deal, called the "second amended judgment," allowed the town to forego building sewers townwide if it established special septic districts. But the district plan appeared to shift the burden of a townwide problem to a small group of homeowners and led to the formation of the citizens group.

"The health of the entire town is at stake. This meeting is a call to action for every Cohasset citizen."
LISA BUMSTEAD, CEES SPOKESWOMAN

The forum was sponsored by Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions.

Moreover, Bumstead, one of the CEES organizers, has also been viewed as the point woman behind the campaign to stop the second phase of the north Cohasset sewer project. (After opposition from CEES, the annual Town Meeting voted down a question about borrowing money to continue the construction.) But she defended her role against the North Cohasset sewering when she fielded a tough question from school board member Joseph McElroy.

"How can you expect north Cohasset residents to work on a cooperative solution if CEES and others basically tell the residents to fend for themselves?" he asked.

Bumstead denied her objective was ultimately to stop sewers in north Cohasset. Rather the goal was to stop the town from continuing to "piecemeal" solutions on wastewater pollution.

"It was very clear it was not to stop the sewering but to stop the piecemeal approach and force the town to take on a comprehensive program," she said. Since the town meeting decision, the situation has moved "in a positive direction," she also said.

Bumstead urged the gathering to attend the sewer board's upcoming meeting at 7:30 p.m. June 4, playing down her split with the commissioners. But while she appeared to be holding out an olive branch, other speakers alluded to some favorite CEES targets such as Tutela Engineering Associates, the town's consultant. Health board member Steve Bobo avoided a direct comment about Tutela. But he did propose the town hire a full-time engineer, instead of paying a consultant.

However, Bobo and the other speakers mainly tried to explain the dimensions of the wastewater problem. John McNabb, an opponent of the Cohasset Heights Landfill, talked about the danger posed by septic systems to the drinking water. Even when properly maintained, he said, there can be problems. He cited a 1986 Camp, Dresser & McKee water resources management plan which identified wastewater disposal as the "largest threat" to the safe drinking water supply. McNabb said sewers were sometimes the answer.

Peter Dillon, a hydrogeologist, delved into the technical questions about putting septic systems on Cohasset drumlins. Dillon said communities should get together on a solution that worked with the soil conditions in their neighborhoods. A community solution meant everybody could win, while individuals working for separate solutions will just end up spending a lot of money to put a "mound" of dirt in their backyards.

Selectman Thomas Callahan urged the public to let the board know the public is behind a townwide solution.

"The board of selectmen can't just go off on one of their own tangents," he said. Callahan reminded the audience the town was still under pressure from the state to fix its wastewater woes. The reminder was probably enough because David Ferris of the state DEP hammered the point home earlier. Ferris said he was not going away until the town complied with the state orders.

"I will be here until Cohasset finishes its responsibility under the court order," he said.

Think of a 45-acre "chunk of granite with 10 million years of seagull dung on top of it." That is the way planning board Chairman Al Moore, May 20, described the land off Jerusalem Road where a Weymouth developer intends to plant a new 23-lot subdivision. Though Moore has made it clear he does not welcome the development, he stopped short of saying the planning board would stop it.

The board is still hearing opinions from the public on the future of Jerusalem Road Estates. The second part of the hearing on the new project was continued until June 17.

The subdivision was all but turned down two years ago when the planning board deemed the development of the former Curtis Estate "not in the best interests of the town." Developer Steven Corey, then withdrew a "preliminary site plan" when it became evident he did not have support from the Cohasset board.

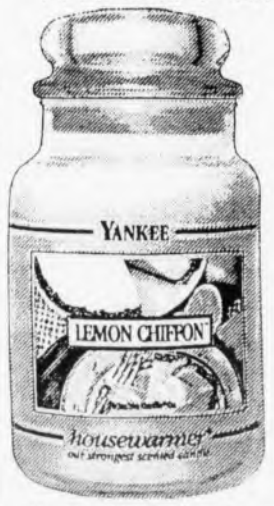
Now Corey is back, and the land is still the battleground. Moore has said he believes the size of the project is "too massive" for the area.

"Wow, this is just an awful lot of build out on this land," he said. After the meeting Moore stuck by his description of the earth near Straits Pond.

"I think it was an apt way to describe it," he said. But his opinion was not echoed by attorney Charles Humphreys.

"It is extremely attractive, desirable land," Humphreys said.

The soil composition proves the main stumbling block two years ago when the sewer commissioner went on the record to nix a new main connecting the subdivision to the wastewater treatment plant in Hull, because the rockbound soil cannot support septic systems, a sewer line would have to be laid before houses could be built. The lack of connection continues to pose a hurdle, but Moore acknowledged the one issue would probably not be enough to kill the proposal. Nor would solving the wastewater problem necessarily be enough to save the plan.



Moore also wanted to know what would become of the trees and the wildlife if the development went ahead.

"What's going to happen to these critters?" he said.

Humphreys said the birds would probably be happy to have people to leave out bird feeders and baths. As for deer, the lawyer said they are very bold and would probably "come up on porches and eat shrubs."

The discussion turned frank after Humphreys asked for "feedback." The lawyer was not fazed by concern from the planning board about the project's many problems such as the length of the road into the development. It is just too long under the subdivision rules.

"Cohasset is full of roads well in excess of regulations," Humphreys said. While still pushing for the big size, he indicated his client, who was present, might ultimately consider scaling down to get the plan approved. But Humphreys and engineer Robert Hannigan of Quincy stressed the Corey proposal was comparable to existing subdivisions such as Windy Hill and did not pose a unique situation.

Chapter not closed on Osgood library use

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The town will solicit proposals for the Osgood School that could include a library within the 72-year-old building or somewhere on the school grounds.

After an hour of debate Monday, selectmen voted 4-1 to issue a Request for Proposal that allows a developer the option of submitting a proposal to develop the site solely for housing and/or a mixed housing and library use.

The RFP asks for congregate senior housing and/or in addition to senior housing, a library within the building or a library in a free standing building somewhere on the school premises.

Not only were selectmen divided on how the RFP should be drafted but the Osgood Reuse Committee was also split 4-2 on including the library alternative in the RFP.

Leading the charge against the library alternative was Rich Silvia who said the mixed-use proposal goes against what the vote of the 1996 town meeting to return the building to the tax rolls.

"Holding on to part of the building for future town use is not part of our director nor should it be," Silvia said.

Silvia proposed keeping the RFPs completely separate, a view endorsed by his fellow Osgood reuse committee member Patrick Plante and Selectman Merle Brown.

But reuse committee chairman Chris Ford said there was no harm in opening the door for a creative proposal that includes a library.

Selectman Tom Callahan doubted any developers would go for the library alternative which would consume 14,000 of the building's 29,000 square feet but felt it should be looked at.

"I think 90 percent or more of the bids will be for housing only," Callahan said. "What concerns me is we may lose a property when we have a real need for it."

He said the combined RFP is not inconsistent with the town meeting vote and said the townspeople expect their officials to act smart and look at all options, a view shared by Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris.

"I think 90 percent or more of the bids will be for housing only. What concerns me is we may lose a property when we have a real need for it."

— SELECTMAN TOM CALLAHAN

"Another public need has come up, a need we must deal with sooner or later," Callahan said.

Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees, said the nine trustees were in agreement that they not let the opportunity to look at Osgood as a potential library site slip by (see report, page 11).

Towle said in light of the town facilities study which shows expanding the Pratt building is not feasible, maintaining the status quo is not an option.

"It is shortsighted not to take advantage of the opportunity," she said. "It will not hurt anything to look at both options at this time."

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., said town meeting's approval of the new elementary school was tied to the Osgood school being sold to offset the school construction costs.

He said the proposal for a new library came "out of the blue."

"I've never had a problem parking, never had a problem getting a seat and we recently voted air conditioning for the building," he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said ultimately town meeting will have the final say.

"The RFP looks at either/or — the important thing is not to foreclose the opportunity to look at the library use," he said.

After considerable discussion on the criteria and wording of the RFP, selectmen voted to issue the RFP with the library alternative. Brown voted with the majority. Saying she was following the vote of town meeting, Selectman Diane Sullivan cast the dissenting vote. Selectman Nan Roth voted with the majority but with the caveat that the library look at other options such as keeping the Pratt building and operating the children's library in branch locations, like the schools.

She said she was hesitant to jump into the library project without all the information from the town facilities audit, which is due soon.

"We may find we have expensive projects and some are going to be a high priority for the town," she said.

Adding some humor to the debate, Sullivan joked that the town hall should move to the Osgood School so the library could occupy the town hall building.

Long-time Hingham commuter boat operator opts out

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In what is being described as a business decision, a long-time commuter boat operator has pulled the plug on his operation.

After 14 years, Dana Goodell — whose loss of the MBTA contract ignited a commuter boat war last summer — will no longer provide commuter boat service out of Hingham, a company spokesman said.

"Basically our ridership dropped off some and it was just not financially feasible any longer," said Jim Craig, manager at Goodell's company Princess Yacht Charters.

"It all comes down to dollars and cents."

Last summer Goodell owner of Boston Harbor Commuter Services joined forces with William Spence of Massachusetts Bay Lines to form a new venture, the Hingham Commuterboat. The new service tried to compete with Harbor Cruises, the company which won the five-year MBTA contract providing a subsidy to operate the Hingham-Boston commuter service.

The rivalry started a war during which the competing companies tried to lure customers through amenities such as comfortable seats and a range of food items. The ongoing battle also featured claims and counter claims of safety violations between the two carriers.

Spence, who leased two of Goodell's boats and used two BCHS crews for the Hingham Commuterboat, said he will continue to run commuter boat service through Mass. Bay Lines on a limited schedule.

Jane Daly, a partner with Harbor Cruises, declined to comment on Goodell's departure.

But she praised her company's efforts to provide a service that attracted more riders.

"We're very gratified and grateful that South Shore commuters recognized the commitment we've made and the investment we've made to provide a superior level of service," Daly said.

"That effort is culminating in the arrival of our first state-of-the art catamaran next month," she said.

Harbor Cruises will soon add two catamarans with a passenger capacity of 350 to its fleet. Taking summer recreational traffic into consideration, Daly said the high speed vessels will cut the commute time by ten to 15 minutes.

Celebration of Earth and Peace

Jim Scott, composer and guitarist, will offer his original songs and readings of his poetry in the 10:30 a.m. service Sunday at First Parish.

Humans and our connections with the Earth will be the topic of a special service at the First Parish in Cohasset Sunday, June 7, led by Jim Scott, former member of the Paul Winter Consort. Scott will offer his original songs and readings of his poetry in the service at 10:30 a.m. at the church on Cohasset Common.

Composer, guitarist, singer and Unitarian peace activist from Eugene, Ore., Scott considers himself a catalyst, using music to spread a message of peace, empowerment and equality. He has performed and led services at more than 200 Unitarian churches across the United States and Canada. Three of his songs are included in the Unitarian hymnbook.

From a background in classical and jazz studies at Eastman School of Music and Berklee College, Scott's music has gathered influences from his involvement in peace and ecology causes as well as his travels to Nicaragua, Australia and across North America. He also composed a stage musical "The Tree and Me," about saving the old growth forest of the Northwest, which has been produced in New York and Michigan.

"My music is both reflective and proactive," Scott says. "I believe strongly in the power of song and self-expression to create positive change."

For information about the service, call the First Parish at (617) 383-1100. Everyone is welcome.

Schoolhouse Rock Live! on stage

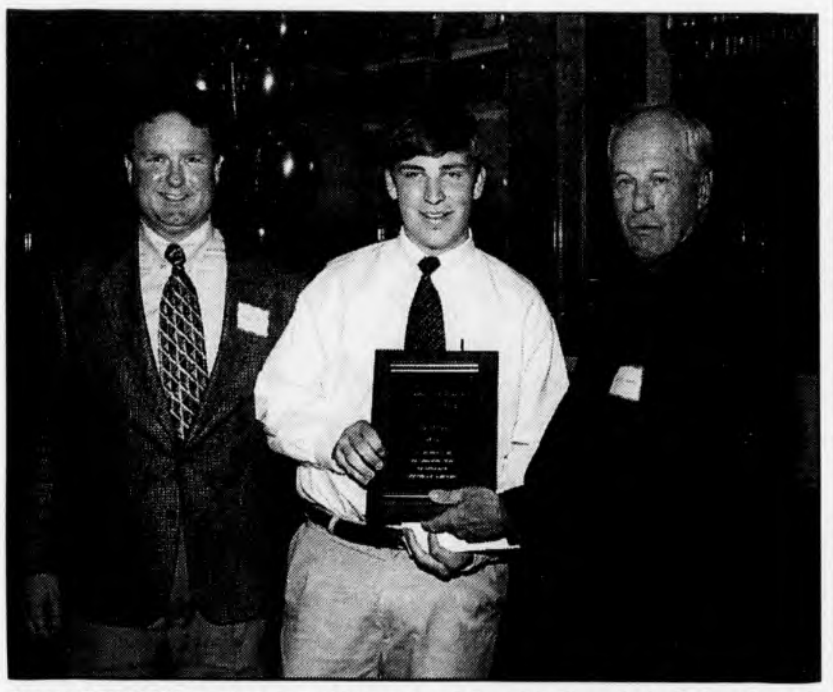
Hull Performing Arts is proud to announce Schoolhouse Rock Live! book by Scott Ferguson, George Keating and Kyle Hall; music and lyrics by Lynn Ahrens, Bob Dorough, Dave Frishberg, Kathy Mandry, George Newall and Tom Yohe. The show will be directed by Lindsay Clinton and the musical director is Kathy Clancy of Braintree.

The original television series was created by George Newall and Tom Yohe, based on an idea by David McCall. These TV "shorts" taught children about a variety of things, including the rules of grammar (Conjunction, Junction), the creation of a bill in our government (I'm Just a Bill), and the Constitution (We the People). The humor and charm of this show translates just as much to adults. Many of today's parents will remember singing along with these skits on Saturday mornings when they were kids.

The director, Lindsay Clinton, has appeared in many HPA productions including "Two by Two," and "The Importance of Being Earnest," "Tomfoolery," "A Thurber Carnival" and "The Fantasticks" are her favorite directing credits.

The show will be presented in two different venues: outdoors at Fort Revere from June 20-21 and indoors at the Anne Scully Senior Center from June 25-27. Fort Revere provides a unique opportunity for HPA members to perform in an outdoor arena.

Outdoor performances are June 20 and 21 at 2 p.m. at Fort Revere, Telegraph Hill, Hull. Indoor performances are June 25, 26 and 27 at 8 p.m., and June 27 at 2 p.m. at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave. in Hull. Ticket prices are $8, $9 and $10 for the indoor tickets and $5 for all outdoor performances. Call (781) 925-2406 for directions and other information.



Hull Performing Arts is a non-profit, tax-exempt community theatre.

Portrait painting workshop slated

The North River Art Society will present a workshop by Clement Micarelli entitled "Painting a Portrait with a Mental Attitude" on June 13 and 14 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. An evening reception will be held June 12 at 7 p.m. The fee for the workshop is $150 for non-members and $140 for members.

The workshop is designed for those interested in advancing their portrait painting. Micarelli will cover thinking about a portrait in an intelligent way. Topics covered will be composition (placement, design, etc.), purposeful editing (focus on the viewer), painting a portrait through the logical steps. Demonstrations and one on one attention will be given. The workshop will increase your drawing and painting abilities and the momentum will continue to inspire you to new understanding.

COLLEGE BOUND

Aaron Sawchuk, center, son of Wayne and Annette Sawchuk of Beechwood Street, receives a $1,500 scholarship from the Pilgrim Skating Arena in Hingham at a special reception at the arena May 8. With Aaron are Hoby Taylor, left, president of the skating arena, and Roger Williams, member of the board of directors and chairman of the scholarship committee. This year the arena awarded 18 scholarships to area high school seniors. Aaron, a CHS senior, will attend Middlebury in the fall.

LEND AN EAR

It is interesting to note that antibiotic therapy is increasingly being called into question as an effective treatment for childhood ear infections. In many cases, antibiotics not only fail to shorten the duration of the infection by any significant amount, but they are also not likely to prevent its recurrence. From a wider perspective, many cite the unrestrained use of antibiotics for the emergence of strains of bacteria that are resistant to all but the most powerful antibiotics. In light of the fact that many in the medical profession are questioning the effectiveness of treating ear infections with antibiotics, patients may want to consult a chiropractor who believes in unleashing the body's innate healing powers to fight infection.

Does anyone in your family suffer with recurring ear infections? At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, our goal is to provide you and your entire family with quality chiropractic healthcare beyond the mere relief of obvious symptoms for your long-term health interests for the rest of your life. Kate Stone gets set to deliver a vicious smash back to her opponent in early round action this week at the MIAA Division 2 South state tennis tourney.

The beat goes on for Cohasset girls' tennis

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Sixteen up and 16 down. That's been the story this year for the undefeated CHS girls' tennis team. They went for #17 yesterday (Wednesday) against Dover-Sherborn with the winner to take on the winner of Milton at Scituate on Thursday (today) at Hingham High School.

The Lady Skippers, the #1 seed in the Division 2 South bracket, got to the semifinals by Harwich and Medway by identical 3-2 scores early on in the tourney.

"We've been playing pretty well," said head coach Sarah Meehan, whose had her teams make the tourney in six of the seven seasons she's coached at Cohasset. "Things seem to have been going our way."

First singles player Kate Stone won her match against Medway but has been hobbled with a muscle pull in her leg. Fortunately, her next treatment is never more than a family member away.

"Her father (Peter) is a physical therapist so we know she's getting the best treatment available," said Meehan. In fact, her father cut short a visit with another one of his clients, Aerosmith singer Steven Tyler, so he could work on his daughter before her big match on Tuesday.

"She's in some pain but she's trying to play her way through everything," said Meehan. "We took her off the court after clinching the Harwich match to save her as much as we could. It's one of those things were she could have finished her

Young team points to bright future

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Skippers began this baseball season with high expectations, a boatload of talent, and plenty of enthusiasm. Unfortunately, these things seemed to die away in midseason, after Cohasset had jumped out to a 5-4 start. Occasionally, the team's potential could be seen, but for the most part it was shrouded in errors and apathy.

However, the Boys in Blue managed to salvage a 7-13 record from the debacle, and the team was not without some fine individual performances. For instance, senior tri-captain Pat Hurley enjoyed far and away the best season of his career, becoming one of coach Knurek's most reliable hitters. Hurley was about as versatile as they come, too, playing first base, pitcher and every outfield position. To cap off his four-year varsity career, Pat was named to the South Shore League All-Star Game.

Greg Taylor also put forth a monumental effort this season. Taylor, too, should have been an All-Star and was certainly Cohasset's MVP as he consistently filled the lead-off-role with speed and power. The team's starting shortstop, the tri-captain also patrolled the outfield a bit. Hampered by a shoulder injury which kept him off the rubber, Taylor should become even more potent next year as he resumes his role as pitcher.

Ben Ketchum was the Skipper ace this year. Off to a hot start with the bat, he cooled off, and then heated up again late in the season. The starting centerfielder, Ketchum was the team's most reliable outfielder. Now with three years of varsity experience under his belt, Ketchum should be able to build on his solid season this year and explode next year.

Coming off a wrestling season which saw him give mat-burn to most of the 152-lbs. wrestlers in eastern Massachusetts, Mike Rossi also lent his hand to the baseball squad.

With his arm basically dead due to a wrestling injury, Rossi swapped his catcher's mitt for an infielder's and played second base and found himself in starting role, because of plays like the one he made against South Shore Vo-Tech, sprinting into right field and catching a pop fly with his back to home plate.

Death, taxes, and Al Schwerin at the hot corner. Schwerin has the spot locked down and he filled it ably this season. Although he wasn't able to show his talent at the plate all year, he managed to hit nearly .400 for the second half of the year. Like Ketchum, if Schwerin puts his work in during the off-season, next year could be a breakout one for him.

The Skippers' starting backstop, Sean Parkinson, handled the pitching staff with excellent judgment this season. Having worked with most of the pitchers since their days on JV, Parkinson used his knowledge of each pitcher's strengths and weaknesses to decide which pitch to call for. One pitcher, who coincidentally writes a sports column for this same paper, recalls in frustration shaking off his battery mate four times in one game, and four times allowing a base hit.

In his first varsity season, Denis Rooney showed flashes of bril-

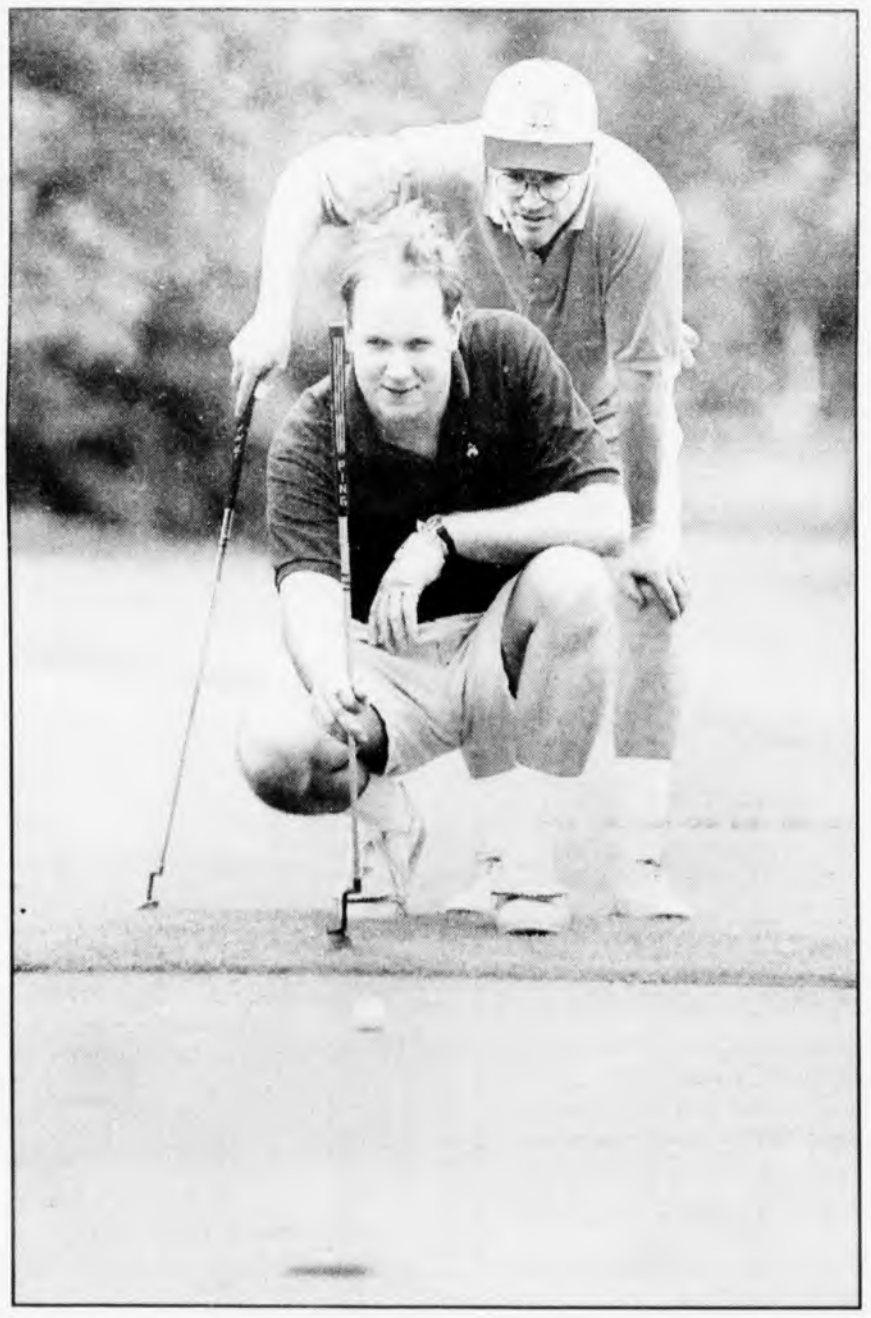
CEF golf tourney cards an ace

Golfers of all shapes and sizes were out at the Cohasset Golf Club Monday afternoon chasing the little white ball in the name of raising funds for local education.

The tourney was the first annual event staged by the Cohasset Education Foundation. The proceeds raised from the tourney will fund new projects and programs in the Cohasset Public School system.



"We hope for this to be an annual event that golfers at all skill levels will enjoy and want to participate in year after year," said CEF president Michael Hurley. "We think this is a great opportunity to enjoy an afternoon of golf at a great facility with friends and business clients. At the same time this also helps the CEF help the schools."

match, but there was really no need for her to do it."

Winners in the Harwich match included #2 singles player Katie Brister, the undefeated first doubles team of Caitlyn Flynt and KC Camacho as well as Ari Afshar at third singles.

Along with Stone, Jessica Stevens and Jesse Zerendow at second doubles and Flynt and Camacho won against Medway.

Although both matches have come down to 3-2 scores, Meehan suggests that those numbers may be a little bit deceptive .

"I don't think there's been a time in the tourney when my confidence has been all that shaken," said Meehan. "We've always been in control of the matches. We're as deep a team as I have ever had and they just go out and take care of business."

If the Skippers do extend their season until Thursday, they are going to be a busy group of tennis players.

Immediately after their match, four of the team members will have to run home to get ready for the senior prom which will be held that evening at the Boston Marriot Hotel.

"If I tell these kids the story about how I to go to my own prom with wet hair I think they're going to revolt," said Meehan with a chuckle. "These kids are focused like you wouldn't believe. When it's time for the game they'll be there ready to play."

Baseball season in review

liance. With an arm like a cannon and a quick bat, Rooney has as much potential as any player on the team. When he learns to wait on the curveball and hit it to right field, he will be feared around the South Shore League. Another outfielder, the year of experience on the parent club undoubtedly did some good for Rooney.

First baseman Ryan Story also saw some varsity action this season. Story had a memorable two-hit performance against Nantucket, his first varsity hits. Tall and rangy, Story even looks like a first baseman, and he is rapidly improving at scooping throws out of the dirt. Also seeing time on JV, Story destroyed the junior varsity pitching, and earned his promotion. Story will be a leading candidate for the first sack job next year.

In a do or die game late in the season, Jared Ford trotted out to third base and helped the Skipper battle back against the Rockland Bulldogs. Although the Bulldogs hung on, Ford showed his mettle at the hot corner, giving Schwerin a rare turn on the pine. Ford hustled after foul balls, stayed low on groundballs, backed up throws, and was in the right places when he needed to be. If the Skippers had played that kind of heads-up baseball throughout the season, who knows?

Another versatile player for Cohasset was tri-captain Jim O'Sullivan. He saw action in the outfield, at first, second, pitcher, and catcher in a back-up role to Parkinson. He spent more innings on the hill than any other pitcher in the South Shore League and helped the Skippers in key victories early in the season.

Sophomore Joe Pergola is the heir to Skipper baseball. And hopefully next year he'll have something to inherit. Like Taylor, Pergola couldn't take the hill this season due to a bum shoulder, but the righty found his niche at first base, playing the bag like he'd been doing it his whole life. Number three also got it done with the stick, too, even going so far as to represent the winning team at the All-Star Weekend Home Run Derby Contest.

Sean Conte possessed maybe the best outfield instincts on the team and was a clutch hitter for Cohasset, seemingly with ice water in his veins. During the very same Rockland game in which Ford strutted his stuff, Conte displayed a little flair, too. Playing right field, he came sprinting in for a line drive on the mud pit that was Rockland's baseball field that day. Like a trooper, Conte dived headfirst, knowing full well he'd get a faceful of dirt. But he may not have realized how much. As even the umpires chuckled, Conte rose with dignity, with his uniform brown and soaked-through, began sputtering mud.

On a team chock full of outfielders, another sophomore surprise was Chris Pratt. Deftly playing all three outfield spots and second base, Pratt took his hacks at the plate and played a key role in several rallies for Cohasset. With a reliable glove and a quick bat, Pratt will be a mainstay on this team for another two years. Sporting number six, Pratt's hustle and determination served as a fine example to his teammates.

With unabashed enthusiasm, Danny Mulligan also earned his varsity letter this season. Playing right field and catcher this year, Mulli picked up his first varsity hit in the midst of a ritual slaughtering at the hands of Hanover. Facing one of the hardest throwing pitchers in the league, Mulli stepped to the plate, boldly stepped up in the box, and cocked his bat menacingly. While his teammates suppressed laughter, the pitch came in, and Mulli sent it on a line into right field.

Despite a hand injury which kept him out of action for the last few games of the season, Pete Minnar was a solid addition to the team. Eating up innings for a team stretched dangerously thin in the pitching department, Minnar was another sparkplug in some important rallies. He also played right field quite well, making a sensational catch in right field in a big win against Hanover.

With such a talented roster, one might wonder how the Skippers failed to qualify for this year's state tourney. One might take into account that this reporter's flagrantly benevolent sentiments toward the home team may have flavored the article a bit, but a better answer would be that there is no answer. It's hard to place a finger on what happened to this year's edition. The talent is unquestionable. Inexperience? Lack of desire? Not knowing how to win? Bad breaks?

In truth, it's probably a combination of all of these. But, we'll get 'em next year.

Sullivan reflects on first year as a Bruin

1997-98 was a successful homecoming for Duxbury resident

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The more things change for Boston Bruins forward Mike Sullivan the more they stay the same, even in the summer.

Instead of nailing hockey stars like Gretzky, Jagr and Lindros into the boards at every opportunity, now he's taken to nailing down boards on the back porch of his Duxbury home.

And instead of mowing down opponents in front of Byron Dafoe, he's mowing his front lawn.

See. It's all the same, just a little bit different for the Marshfield native who just completed his first season with the professional hockey team he grew up hoping to play for.

"Every local kid dreams of playing in the National Hockey League, but to be able to do it for the team that you grew up watching is really something special," said Sullivan on a recent afternoon during a break from his summer chores. "I had to buy my father a satellite dish when I was playing out on the West Coast, but this year everyone was able to see me live and in person.

"It was just a great year overall," he added. "The team seemed to come together right from the beginning of the year, which made everything a lot of fun this season."

The fun began on June 21,1997 when Sullivan was traded from the Calgary Flames to Boston for a seventh round pick in a draft day trade that went somewhat unnoticed with all the hoopla surrounding the B's top draft picks Joe Thornton and Sergei Samsonov.

Sullivan would not go unnoticed much longer. The 30-year-old left wing played in 77 games this season and put up five goals (two game winners) and 13 assists while logging in some major time on the penalty-killing unit and shadowing some of the league's elite scorers.

"I wasn't surprised that Calgary was going to move me, but I was pleasantly surprised when they told me it was Boston that wanted me," remembered Sullivan, who has also put in time with the San Jose Sharks organization and San Diego of the International Hockey League since his days as a B.U. Terrier.

"I was a little bit worried that Boston had a lot of players who did the same thing as I do, but everything worked out great," added Sullivan. "Pat (Bruins coach Pat Burns) had a role in mind for me and I worked on a lot of different lines in a lot of different situations."

Sullivan was indeed a valuable jack-of-all-trades this season, seeing time on the fourth line with Thornton and Ken Baumgartner as well as on a penalty-killing line with Rob DiMaio. He even got a taste of the glamorous life on an offensive line centering Anson Carter and Ted Donato.

"At some points I'd end up playing all three forward positions on three different lines in the same game," said Sullivan. "It was a challenge but I also had a great deal of fun and enjoyed the ice time."

With the addition of a new coaching staff, character players such as Sullivan and Baumgartner as well as the big years from youngsters Samsonov and Jason Allison, the Bruins dressing room seemed to be a happier place than it had been in years.

"I wasn't here to experience it for myself, but from what the other guys said this season was a lot different than last year," said Sullivan. "There was a different attitude and approach from the start, which I think had a lot to do with Pat and his staff coming in and saying that they weren't going to accept anything but 100 percent effort and commitment."

Coming from missing the playoffs for the first time in nearly three decades (the longest string in professional sports) to pulling down a fifth spot in the Eastern Conference, but for a foot, nay a stray toe in the crease Sullivan and friends could very well be still playing today instead of watching Buffalo and Washington battle it out for a chance to go for the Stanley Cup.

The Bruins looked to have tied their first round series against Washington at 2-2 when P.J. Axelsson put a shot past Olaf Kolzig for an important overtime win. Or so it seemed.

The thrill of victory quickly turned into agony at the Fleet when officials ruled that Bruins forward Tim Taylor had the smallest part of his skate in the goal crease, negating the goal.

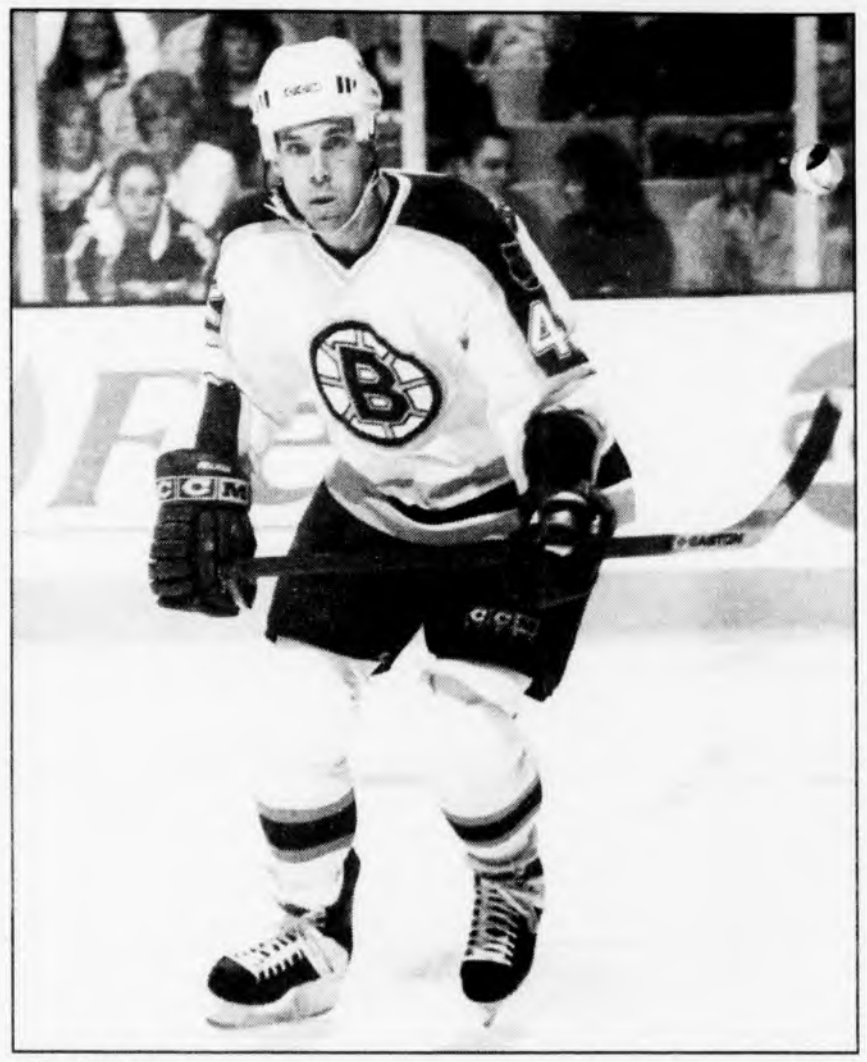
Washington would score when play resumed and eventually took the series in six games.

"I'm not sure it was a back-breaking play that decided the series, but there's no doubt that if we win that game it's a different series," said Sullivan. "If we go back to Washington at 2-2 rather than down 3-1, everything changes.

"I thought that we played really well against Washington but we just couldn't seem to bury the opportunities when we were given the chance," he added. "The games now are hard to watch at times because you know that our team proved that we were good enough to be there.

"You are never as far away from a title as you think you are. Given the right breaks and the puck bouncing your way, you could be there playing for the Stanley Cup."

With a captain such as Ray Bourque, you are also never more than a step away from doing something special.



"The man really is unbelievable. You couldn't say anything negative about him if you tried," said Sullivan of the Bruins legendary defenseman. "He is an incredible role model for rookies and veterans alike with the way he keeps in shape, his work ethic and the respect he shows for the game.

"When Ray speaks in the dressing room, you can't help but listen to him."

Sullivan, who signed just before the trading deadline for one more year with the team, is looking for more good things from the hometown team next season.

"You can't help but be excited when you see all the talent that we have around the dressing room," said Sullivan. "Allison and Samsonov really came through this year and I think Thornton is ready to break out.

"It's an exciting time to be part of the Bruins organization."

SO HAPPY TOGETHER

'Damn the boat, let's keep on fishing!'

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

The three fishing musketeers took the aluminum skiff out around the rocks east of Suzanne's Guest House and were into the fish. Really into the fish, one right after the other. Soon it became a pain to be confined to the boat and the adventurers pulled up on Smith Rock. Each picked a spot and the hot fishing continued late into the afternoon. One commented, hey, that boat looks just like ours pointing to the skiff, now making way rapidly toward Egypt Beach with no one onboard. No big deal, was the aggregate reply as the wave of hookups continued, dulling the senses to everything else around them.

The hot fishing continued as the sun sank behind the beach houses along Glades Road. Now the tide had come in quite far and the discussion turned to what to do. Onshore their voices were heard and in short order the Scituate Fire Department's rescue boat had them safe and sound on the dark beach. All's well that ends well.

Meanwhile out on the chop around the B-Buoy, fishing is hot for mackerel. Ted Abbadessa was cranking in string after string of mackerel and what was this? A bluefish? Already? Yes! Mixed in with the mackerel for the rest of the day were bluefish and stripers too. A 41-incher swung from the scale at day's end. Twenty-one-and-a-half pounds barks Harry.

Egypt beach sunbathers sat open mouthed as Kevin McCord's Gates School fishing club traipsed across the beach to set up for the annual saltwater expedition. Rods, reels, tackleboxes, nets, bait buckets and other paraphernalia dotted the water's edge as excited young anglers got set up on the rising tide. Conditions were perfect but the fish thought otherwise and refused to accommodate the young anglers.

Monday afternoon the same group plus another couple dozen descended on the hospitality of the Scituate Rod and Gun Club for the final outing of the year. A good time was had by all and many trout were captured by the group. Scores of prizes were distributed following the derby. The next day two out of breath youngsters burst into the shop. We need shiners and nightcrawlers they gasped. What's going on, Harry asked a counted out the shiners. The big tagged trout didn't get caught yesterday the kids chanted in unison. The were headed back to the club for more.

One spot along the Cohasset shore will be dotted with surf rods equipped with bells but no fishermen in sight. They will be hard at work at the house under construction with an ear for the jingle of a striper on the line. Worked pretty good the other day the foreman groaned. Now they all want to do it.

Rumor has it a 46-inch bass was caught way up the North River in Hanover. Herring must be good bait. The fellow wading knee-deep in the South River with the dip net was oblivious to all those watching. Tube worms are hot around the rocks and swimmers like Rebels, Mambos and Bombers are a good bet inshore. Tuna are out there Ron reports but the radio had already given them away. The perverted squawk of the scrambler and the left-left-left-straight ahead call of the plane let us know. The stick boats are on the prowl.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

South Shore soccer camp

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 to 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's eighth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department; first floor, Town Hall, or call 383-4109. Brochures and registration forms are available at the recreation office.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both boys and girls during the week of Monday through Friday, Aug. 3 to 7, and Aug. 10 to 14.

Should a camper wish to attend both camps, this is now possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camps must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for the camp is $195 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore soccer camp represents topflight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players for the New England area.

Hockey skills workshops in Hingham

Hockey Skills Development Workshops is offering a High Speed Skills program for Mites and Squirts. Skating Wednesday nights this summer for 8 weeks at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham.

The camp is directed by experienced College and High School coaches that truly believe Skill Development is a craft. All programs feature a positive learning environment, limited class sizes, and are focused towards skills actually used in playing the game.

For further details please contact (781) 769-7783.

Jaffe lacrosse clinic for grades five and six

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Mr. Chuck Jaffe will direct, again this summer, an eight-week lacrosse clinic for youngsters in grades five and six.

Clinics are held Mondays at Miliken Field, from 6:30 to 8 p.m., beginning Monday, June 29, and continuing eight weeks through Aug. 17. The cost for the eight-week, full-equipment, contact clinic is $35 per participant.

Registration forms are currently available at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Space is limited. Mr. Chuck Jaffe, a Cohasset resident and former collegiate lacrosse player and league coach, volunteers his services for this unique lacrosse opportunity.

Softball league is looking for teams

The Cohasset Men's Softball league is looking for a few good teams.

Games are played on Sunday afternoons from late-May to August at the Beechwood ballpark.

'What's the Big Deal About Baseball' on stage

All of the Deer Hill fifth grade participated in a unit on baseball this spring and the result was an engaging four act play "What's the Big Deal About Baseball" written by the entire group. Using a collaborative meeting model, and with the help of high school seniors Haydn Hodgson and Ali Kinchala, a small group of fifth graders wrote a one act play. Based on research done by reading baseball stories, history and poems, the plays were then combined through a creative collaborative process under the guidance of teachers Dayle Dickinson, Kathy Jordan, Frank Deakey and Roger Bourarsa. The result was an in-depth knowledge of a subject, a collaborative learning experience and a fantastic production. Students performed before marvelous student painted sets, sang wonderful songs and decked out in captivating costumes, taught the audience about the true, and fabled histories of baseball, the struggle of minorities in the sport, they myths, facts and legends of America's favorite past time. Two performances to a full auditorium were held Friday, May 22. Remarkably talented 5th graders did an impressive job.

Adam Haracz as Pee Wee Reese.

Will McCarthy, Emma Grinnell, Becca Lear, Maura McCue and Luis Blanco perform in a special play about baseball at the Deer Hill School.

Cohasset student to attend medical leadership forum

Susana Candia of Cohasset is scheduled to participate in the 1998 National Youth Leadership Forum on Medicine from July 20 to July 30 in San Francisco.

Susana, in the class of 1999 at Cohasset High School, will be among 350 outstanding high school juniors and seniors from across America who have attained the qualifications required to participate in the Forum. Susan was selected because of her outstanding academic achievements and her interest in the profession of medicine.

For the July 20 to July 30 Forum on Medicine, Susana will join her fellow students in San Francisco for 11 days of discovery and mentorship at some of our country's most prominent and technologically-advanced medical institutions. Among the prestigious medical establishments the students are scheduled to visit are the University of California, Davis School of Medicine, the University of California-San Francisco Campus, Pacific and California campuses, David Grand Medical Center-Travis Air Force base and the Children's Hospital Oakland. Intensive day-long concentrations at these and other institutions will allow students to examine state-of-the-art diagnostic tools and future medical specialties in detail.

For the July 20 to July 30 Forum on Medicine, Susana will join her fellow students in San Francisco for 11 days of discovery and mentorship at some of our country's most prominent and technologically-advanced medical institutions.

Students will also have the opportunity to study and learn form some of the nation's most distinguished medical leaders. Prominent leaders in the medical community that students are scheduled to hear from include Dr. Patch Adams, Founder of the Gesundheit Institute, Dr. Warner Greene, Director of Gladstone Institute of Virology and Immunology, Dr. Edgar Engleman, Medical Director of Stanford Blood Center and Professor of Pathology at Stanford University, Dr. Elizabeth M. Mutisya, Resident in Neurological Surgery, University of California, San Francisco and Dr. James Kahn, Director of San Francisco General Hospital Clinical Component of AIDS, Clinical Research Center and Asst. Professor of Medicine, University of California, San Francisco.

Topics to be discussed include breakthroughs in genetic research, cancer research, AIDS, sports medicine, neonatal and pediatric research, computers in the world of medicine, public health, clinical decision-making and bioethics.

The National Youth Leadership Forum is a non-profit educational organization that sponsors highly specialized, career-oriented programs for outstanding high school students with demonstrated leadership potential. The National Youth Leadership Forum develops and conducts annual Forums on Medicine, Law and Defense, Intelligence and Diplomacy.

Village Farmers' Market opens June 4

The Cohasset Village Farmers' Market is gearing up for its third season, starting June 4 and running every Thursday through Oct. 15, from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. The market will once again take place on Cohasset Common at the corner of South Main Street and Robert E. Jason Road in Cohasset Village.

Vendor space is still available for interested farmers, gardeners, crafters and bakers at $45 for a table space and $75 for a vehicle space. Call the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce at (781) 383-1010 for more information.

The market will once again sponsor different activities for families to enjoy including live folk music, cooking demonstrations, children's face painting, occasional pony rides and much more. Musicians and entertainers looking for free exposure are welcome.

The Cohasset Chamber is a sponsor of the Farmers' Market in its continuing effort to revitalize the Cohasset Village business district. The chamber invites all to the market and enjoy the fresh fruits, vegetables, herbs, plants, baked goods, jams and jellies, lobsters, fresh and dried flower bouquets, breads and much more. Set aside enough time to enjoy the music and visit the many shops throughout Cohasset Village and Harbor. If you would like more information, call or write the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, (781) 383-1010, P.O. Box 336, Cohasset, 02025.

OBITUARIES

Civilian fire/police dispatcher

Albert L. Andrews Jr., 54, a 40-year resident of Cohasset, died Sunday, May 31, at home.

Mr. Andrews was born in Weymouth, son of the late Albert Sr. and the late June (Anderson) Andrews. He was a graduate of Cohasset High School.

He was a call firefighter for the Cohasset Fire Dept. for 27 years; and a retired plant foreman for the Cohasset Water Department, where he worked for 22 years. He was a dispatcher for the Cohasset Police and Fire Departments part-time evenings. He also worked for Crown Security and Engle Auto Supply of Weymouth. He loved working on all types of fire engines, trucks and antique cars.

Mr. Andrews served in the National Guard. His father was the owner of Andrews Garage in Cohasset, no longer in business.

Mr. Andrews leaves his wife, Ellena A. (Thompson); a daughter, Leanne L. Webb of Chelsea; a son, Robert J. of Cohasset; two sisters, Eileen Pratt of Spring Hill, Florida and Edvia Yocum of Cohasset; two grandsons, Skylar and Anthony; and several nieces and nephews. Beanie Baby craze benefits local charities

Buttonwood Books raises money with sales of rare bears

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Several charities in the region are benefiting from a nationwide beanbag toy craze due to some creative business dealing on the part of a local store owner.

Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham, owned by Betsey Detwiler, has initiated a unique fundraising drive that accompanies the purchase of two collectible Beanie Baby dolls.

"Erin" the bear, an Irish green Beanie Baby adorned with a shamrock, and "Princess", a purple bear that pays tribute to the late Princess Diana, are the fuel for the fundraiser. Eager parents and their children have been known to line up at stores and pay exorbitant prices to own specific Beanie Babies.

Beanie Baby customers can donate to Road to Responsibility, South Shore Habitat for Humanity, the Cohasset PSO, the Scituate PTO, Wellspring Literacy Program in Hull or the Hingham Education Foundation.

The rare bears are on sale at Buttonwood Books for the toys' retail price of $5.95, provided that the buyer writes a $100 check to be donated to their choice of a handful of local charities. The promotion lasts until supplies run out, Detwiler said.

Beanie Baby customers can donate to Road to Responsibility, South Shore Habitat for Humanity, the Cohasset PSO, the Scituate PTO, Wellspring Literacy Program in Hull or the Hingham Education Foundation.

The beneficiaries of this initiative — the idea for which Detwiler borrowed from a book-selling colleague — are pleased that Buttonwood would include them.

"Buttonwood has always been so cooperative in helping out with the schools," said Elaine Breslow, publicity chairman for the Cohasset Parent-Student Organization. "I think it's wonderful."

Detwiler said the fundraising aspect of selling these particular beanbag bears has put her loyal customers on a level buying field with Beanie Baby dealers who are only interested in making a profit by reselling the toys at their estimated value. And the required $100 donations help worthy causes at the same time, she said.

"This is a very positive way to deal with this," said Detwiler, who has owned the store since it opened nine years ago. "It isn't possible to put them on the open market. We wanted to sell them to our regular customers and not dealers, but because of the scarcity factor it doesn't work that way. We had to set some parameters."

The fundraising idea discourages dealers from scooping up all the Beanie Babies, she said. Unlike Buttonwood customers — who hail from Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham — dealers would be less interested in paying the extra money to support local charities.

So far, sales from "Erin" and "Princess" have yielded more than $5,000 in donations, which will go directly to the different charities. The Cohasset store has already generated at least $2,000 and the Hingham store has raised $2,550, she said.

The charities were chosen based on their location and their contributions to the communities that support the store, Detwiler said.

The Cohasset PSO, the Scituate PTO and the Hingham Education Foundation support the schools in the stores' immediate areas. Road to Responsibility, Habitat for Humanity and Wellspring help people in the area with disabilities of varying degrees — physical, developmental, learning and financial — to overcome the obstacles they face.

"We tried to choose (charities) that have to do with education and are family-oriented," she said. "The teachers support us a lot and the PTOs are always working hard for field trips and special things for students that just aren't in the budget."

Tragedy overshadows school graduation

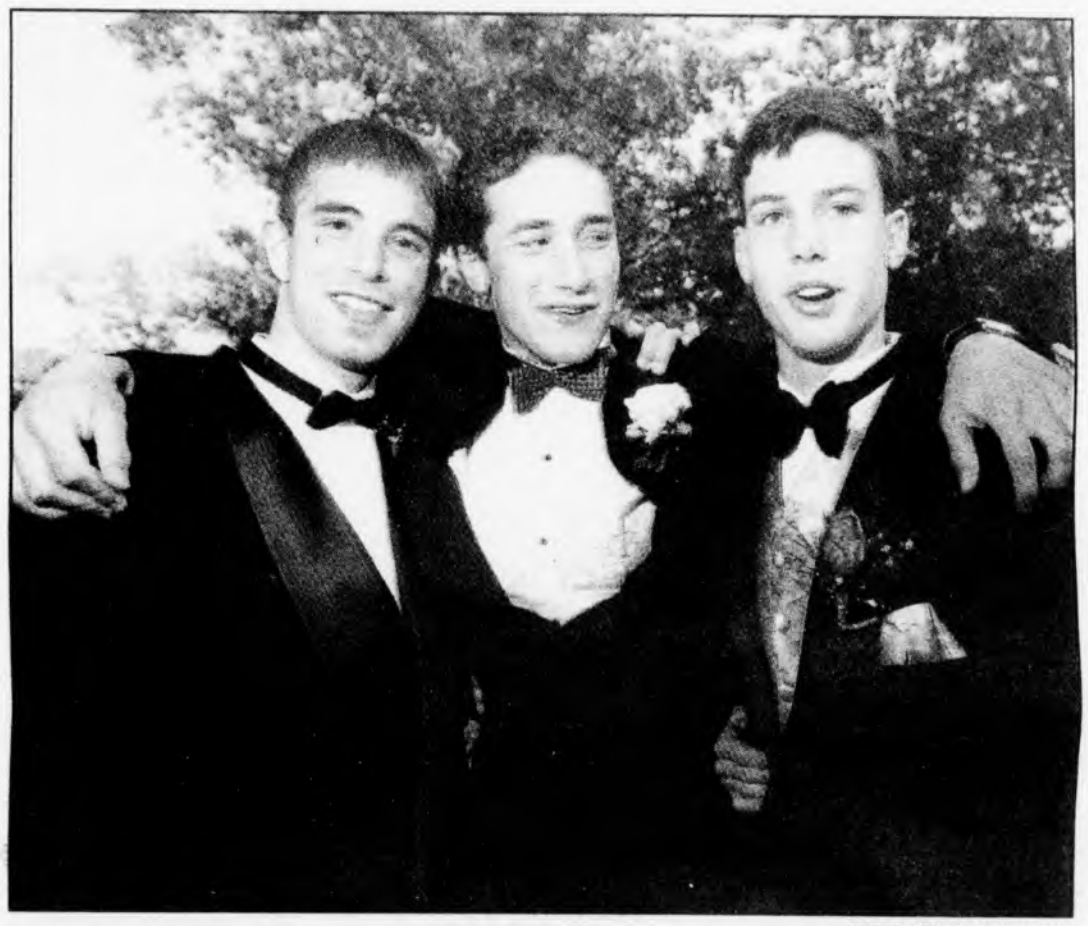
Class mourns loss of Bourke Corcoran

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A high school graduation is supposed to tell the story of a happy separation. It is supposed to mark the end of childhood school days with one last rousing moment for the full company to stand, cheer and remember all the battles they fought together since kindergarten.

But four days before Cohasset High's graduation ceremony, the death of a classmate has changed everything a graduation is supposed to be.

Wednesday morning, the school corridors were hushed as stunned students and teachers tried to find equilibrium on the news late Tuesday night Bourke Corcoran, 18, was killed in a car crash. He was the passenger in a car driven by another classmate Leigh Atherton, also 18. Atherton, who broke an arm in the accident but was with classmates Wednesday morning, said he lost control of the car when he swerved to avoid an animal in the road.



He has been charged with motor vehicle homicide, reckless driving and other traffic violations. He was also supposed to join his 56 classmates in one final event at Saturday's commencement at the South Shore Music Circus.

"It makes it really tough coming right before graduation. Graduation is not going to be the same, no matter what we do."
ASSISTANT PRINCIPAL JOHN DELORENZO

"It makes it really tough coming right before graduation," assistant principal John DeLorenzo said. "Graduation is not going to be the same, no matter what we do."

Corcoran, voted most fun-loving in the Class of 1998, was popular with students in all the classes, and his death touched the whole school. An athlete, Corcoran played indoor lacrosse and was also on the basketball team until senior year. His junior year, he coached the eighth-grade

Police: speed a factor in accident

By Sarah R. Coffey
STAFF WRITER

Early Wednesday morning, Bourke and Merlyn Corcoran lived every parent's worst nightmare.

Asleep in the bedroom of their 301 King St. home, the Corcorans were awakened by Cohasset police officers, who told them their 18-year-old son Bourke L. Corcoran had been killed in a car accident less than 100 yards from home.

Corcoran, who would have graduated this Saturday from Cohasset High, died after the car he was a passenger in crashed near 344 King St. shortly after 11 p.m.. Police used the jaws of life to extricate Corcoran, who police said was unresponsive at the scene. He was taken by ambulance to Miliken Field and by helicopter to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, where he was pronounced dead at 12:09 a.m. Wednesday.

The car's driver and fellow high school senior, William "Leigh" Atherton, was standing behind the vehicle when police arrived. He was taken by ambulance to South Shore Hospital with head injuries and was released yesterday morning.

Atherton, 18, of Clay Spring Road., swerved to avoid an animal in the road and lost control of the car, according to reports. The car hit five pilings on the side of the road, airplaned into a tree, ricocheted into a second tree and crashed down the embankment along King Street. Trees were stripped of bark in the places where the car struck.

Police said there was "no indication" that either Atherton or Corcoran were wearing seat belts. Both air bags in the car were deployed, police confirmed

Rob Buckley, a senior and friend of Corcoran's, said his mother ran outside after hearing the crash and asked a neighbor to call for help.

"The road is a notorious area for accidents in the town. I don't know of any fatal accidents we've had there, but we've had numerous accidents in the past. It's a very thin, windy road."
POLICE CHIEF BRIAN NOONAN

"There was a path there, and that's where the car landed," he said. Buckley ran out to watch the rescue workers but said it was not possible to see anything due to the darkness combined with the glare of spotlights used by emergency crews.

Police said the car, a 1995 Nissan 200SX, was traveling in excess of 70 m.p.h. Speed limit on the road is 30 m.p.h. Alcohol does not appear to be involved.

Atherton faces charges of motor vehicle homicide by reckless operation, operating to endanger, failure to stay within marked lanes, and speeding. He will receive a summons for arraignment at a later date. Atherton's yearbook notes he dislikes "speed traps" and is noted for "driving fast."

Corcoran's yearbook write-up notes "in the event of my demise, when my heart can bear no more, I hope I die for a principal or belief I have lived for."

Instead of graduation celebrations, a grim pallor hangs in the air in the community. In the next few days, seniors will attend both graduation ceremonies on Saturday and Corcoran's funeral.

Those who visited the crash site could not believe one of their own had died. They stood in small groups, gazing at the spot in silent respect, not ready to believe that one of their own was gone.

"Why?" sobbed one girl, tightly hugging a friend. Others sat quietly by the side of the road next to a pile of flowers, photos and other mementos. Cars driving by slowed down to catch a glimpse of the growing gathering of teenagers, many of whom had attended the senior prom with Corcoran last Saturday and who had looked forward to graduating with him Saturday.

A group of students described Corcoran as very friendly. "Everybody knew him," said one teenager.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the road is "a notorious area for accidents in the town. I don't know of any fatal accidents we've had there, but we've had numerous accidents in the past. It's a very thin, windy

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Regional Recycling Cooperative starts

State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announced that legislation he has introduced establishing the South Shore Recycling Cooperative has been adopted along with the 1999 Senate Budget Recommendations. The plan proposed by Hedlund will allow South Shore towns participating in the cooperative to more effectively manage their solid waste and improve their existing recycling programs.

"The establishment of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative is a practical approach for securing a superior solid waste and recycling management plan," Hedlund stated. "This is crucial for the immediate preservation of the public convenience and protection of the environment."

The cooperative is governed by the terms of the "Intermunicipal Agreement for Recycling on the South Shore." Under the terms of the agreement, the cooperative will be authorized to negotiate the terms of regional contracts for the collection of recyclable materials. Towns initially participating in the cooperative include Abington, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Kingston, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

The South Shore Regional Disposal Planning Board has conducted a pilot program over the past four years to study the benefits of a cooperative plan. The Board's success in the pilot program shows that the cooperative proposed n this legislation should provide significant cost savings and improved service to member towns.

Initially, the cooperative will be funded through a budget amendment secured by Hedlund, which provided a $70,000grant. This is a matching fund to finance up to half of the anticipated operating expenses for the first fiscal year. The grant is contingent upon each of the member towns paying a proportional share of the remainder of these expenses.

Free saltwater sportfishing guide

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray offers the 1998 edition of the Saltwater Sport Fishing Guide.

In past years, as many as 70 different species of fish have been identified in the state's regional catch. The guide offers color pictures and detailed descriptions of many types of these fish. In addition, the guide provides basic information about the Commonwealth's recreational fishing opportunities, and includes a map of Massachusetts coastal waters, and listings for bait and tackle shops, party and charter boats, and this year's fishing contests.

For a free copy, call Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray at (617) 722-2400.

Cohasset Health Board orders new CHL hearings

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Members of the board of health have become the latest group of town officials forcing the owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill to face the possibility of a permanent closure.

The health board has decided to hold site assignment hearings at a time when the ZBA and the building inspector have ordered CHL to shut down because of permit violations. CHL is suing in court to overturn those decisions.

Even a brown-out in the building didn't prevent the health board from calling for site assignment hearing. Everyone had agreed on new date for the hearing because CHL's stenographer couldn't operate his tape machine with the power fading Tuesday night. After CHL-owners Paul and John Barry and their attorneys left the building, the power returned and the meeting resumed.

Health board members voted 3-0 after two hours of discussion to order site assignment hearings at a future date based on evidence that CHL posed a threat to public health, safety and the environment. The hearings will serve as a forum for the health board to determine whether to amend, suspend or rescind CHL's site assignment. If the site assignment is rescinded, CHL would not be able to legally operate the landfill in town.

"I have yet to see anything based on the facts that shows that the landfill poses a meaningful threat to the environment. Why not have the town's high-price consultants that you have been paying for years analyze this information and we'll provide a transcript of the hearing. After hearing their analysis, if you think this is an appropriate use of public resources based on a small group's request, then let's go to hearings."
CHL ATTORNEY ANTON MOEHRKE

Health board Chairman Kevin Ulmer said a hearing would be scheduled once the parties involved agreed upon a date. The site assignment is the chief approval issued by the town that allows CHL to operate a landfill in Cohasset. The anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) successfully lobbied the health board to initiate site assignment hearings on evidence that CHL was an ongoing threat to public health, safety and the environment.

SAFE vice-president John K. McNabb Jr. presented the case in a half-hour presentation in which he listed numerous violations committed by CHL. McNabb listed off a long list of alleged violations by CHL, including dumping more than 1,000 tons of waste into Area IV-B of the landfill, which is not permitted for dumping; placing more than 100,000 tons of waste on the slopes of the landfill in violation of DEP height limits; operating without a required ZBA special permit since the Barry's bought the landfill in 1982; contaminating ground and surface water; discharging sediments and leachate into the Lily Pond watershed and nearby wet-

Town to lobby for train relief

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Some town officials are poised to join Hingham in actively opposing the train.

But cooler heads prevailed Monday, as selectmen decided to take a step by step approach to try to get a better deal for Cohasset than the MBTA is offering.

What's at stake is how many homes will receive noise mitigation; how the train will affect the flooding problem through the center of town; local air quality and how best to mitigate the effects of vibration.

Selectmen directed Town Manager Mark Haddad to talk with Hingham and Scituate about how their mitigation negotiations are progressing.

The town's consultant Tech Environmental Inc. of Waltham will retool its report to include a November MBTA study selectmen neglected to provide and adjustments to the noise impacts to include the possibility of whistles. Tech Environmental had acted on the assumption the town will be whistle-free but that's not assured, said selectmen, who will await the T's response to the revised report.

If the T says no to more mitigation measures, then selectmen will seek help from US Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, and state Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman of the transportation committee in the legislature.

Armed with the unflattering consultant's review of the T's environmental impact report,

Losing patients over home health care cuts

Millie and Mattie B. started their life-long love affair when she asked her aunt to see if Mattie would take her to the high school prom.

"I didn't have a date and there were four boys living across the street," Millie said. (The couple did not want their identities revealed.)

She watched from her front windows while her aunt dutifully went across the street.

"I could see him come to the window — he'd been shaving — and then I saw him nod his head yes, so I knew I was set," Millie said.

Mattie smiles and gives his take on the request.

"I had the only car on the street, a '34 Lafayette," he said. "That's why she asked me."

That was more than 50 years ago and their dancing days are behind them now. Mattie, who turned 77 last week, spends his days in a wheelchair, the result of 12 years battling Parkinson's disease.

Someone once said growing old isn't for sissies. Mattie and Millie are living proof. As Parkinson's progressively immobilizes Mattie's once-powerful body, it takes all his strength to get through what used to be the simplest tasks. It's only one of many medical problems that leave him weak and vulnerable.

Millie, 75, wears a weight-lifter's truss around her waist. The weight she lifts is Mattie.

American Anglian wins water department contract

American Anglian, Inc. has been selected as the new contractor for the operation and maintenance of the Cohasset Water Department for the next three years, starting July 1. This selection is contingent on successful negotiations with the Water Commission, which must be completed no later than June 4.

"American Anglian was the best qualified bidder," said Water Commission Chairman Robert E. Kasameyer. "Their proposal showed that they had the strongest and most cost-effective management program for running our water treatment plant and for properly maintaining our water distribution system."

"Anglian also gave us the best deal, for the services they will provide," said Kasameyer. "Their services will cost us $ 479,633.29 for the next fiscal year, a decrease in $48,370.71 from the $528,004 we had budgeted for operation and maintenance next year. We can also use this savings to accelerate our 10-year program of capital improvements to the water system."

American Anglian operates the water system for the Dedham-Westwood Water district, and has 50 years of experience in the management of municipal water systems. American Anglian's services will include, according to their proposal:

- Annual hydrant inspection — replace five to 10 hydrants a year
- Replace 10 percent of water meters per year
- Exercise 55 valves per year
- Annual leak detection program
- Annual flushing of water mains
- Comprehensive computerized maintenance management program
- Pay up to $15,000 of replacement equipment parts and specialized contract services
- Water quality monitoring program and monthly inspection of the watershed
- Ensure a "no-risk" operation and maintenance contract for the town

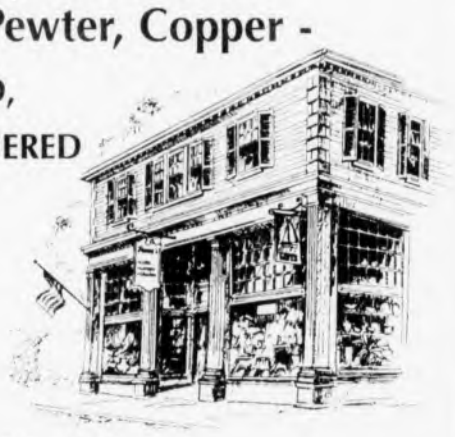
"Their services will cost us $ 479,633.29 for the next fiscal year, a decrease in $48,370.71 from the $528,004 we had budgeted for operation and maintenance next year. We can also use this savings to accelerate our 10-year program of capital improvements to the water system."

ROBERT KASAMEYER, WATER COMMISSION CHAIRMAN

"We were disappointed that our current contractor, Cohasset Water Services, did not submit a stronger proposal," Kasameyer said. "They also submitted the highest price proposal of $569,691, which was almost $90,000 more than the American Anglian proposal and about $40,000 more than we had budgeted."

"The lowest bidder was U.S. Water, who proposed $383,989 for the next fiscal year," Kasameyer said. "However, we felt that their proposal was not advantageous to the town, since they proposed an effective reduction in staffing, did not show the detailed knowledge of our water department that American Anglian did, and proposed some unacceptable changes in the draft contract."

American Anglian, Cohasset Water Services, and US Water were the only three bidders for the three-year contract for operation and maintenance of the Cohasset water department. Under the state request for proposal process, a town is not required to select the lowest bidder if they can show that another bidder will provide services that are more advantageous to the town.



The contract was awarded May 21 by Town Manager Mark Haddad, the town's Chief Procurement Officer, following a recommendation by the Selection Committee that American Anglian was the best qualified. The Selection Committee included the three Water Commissioners, Selectmen Diane Sullivan and Advisory Committee member Alex Koines.

The contract is for a three-year period commencing July 1, 1998, and ending June 30, 2001, with the sole option of the town, if it wishes, to extend the contract for one or two additional three-year periods.

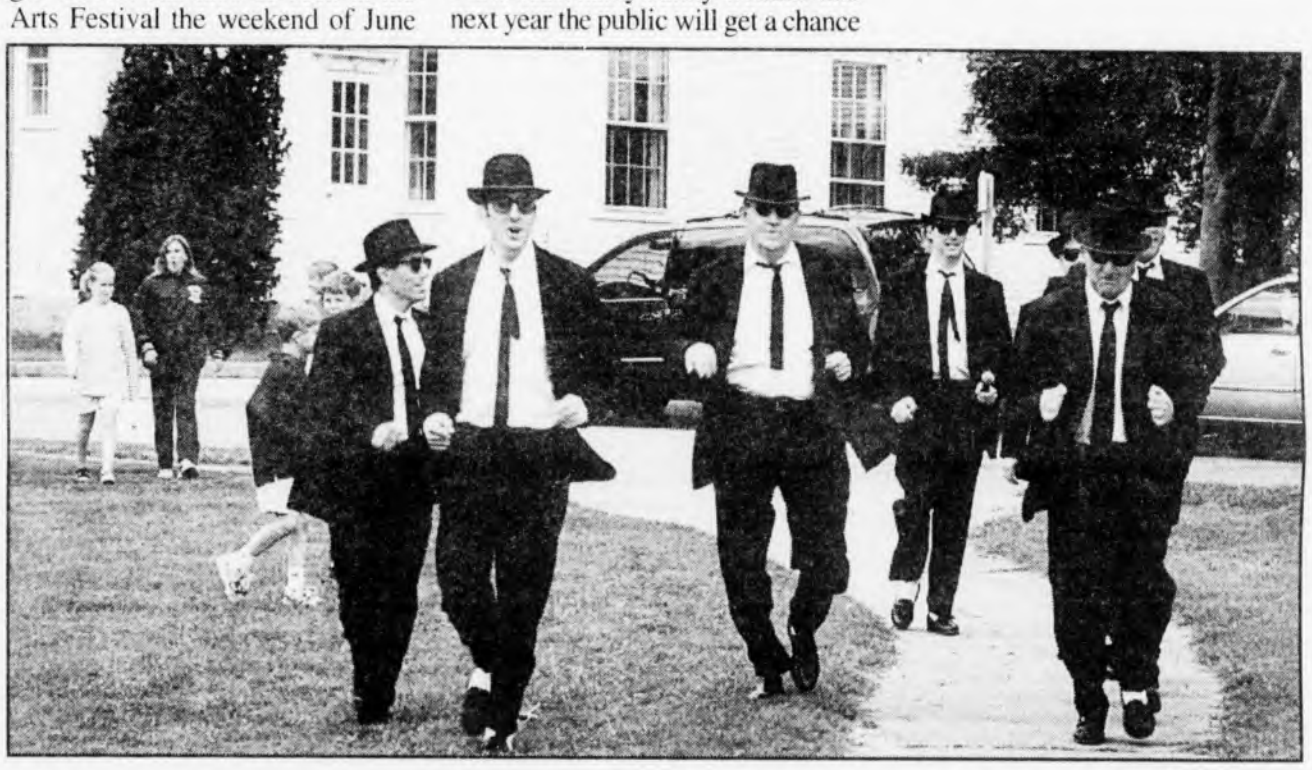
Cohasset Harborfest weekend brings back memories

By Stacie Charbonneau Gregory
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset Harborfest weekend enjoyed much success, and a little wet weather. Friday and Saturday events [illegible] as the Ice Cream Festival and production of "Grease" went as planned, but Sunday's late afternoon activities had to be canceled due to heavy rain.

The stand-out event was the celebration of the Joseph Osgood School's 70th anniversary. From noon until four on Saturday tents were set up on the common, each with a different commemorative theme. One was a "celebration" tent, one contained artwork created by current students, and the third most visited tent contained a photography exhibit. Pictured dated as far back as the 1930's as alumni students like class of 1937's Libby Pompeo searched for her school-aged self among the photos. Derry Schwartner, Margot Cheel and their assistant Faith Bowker Maloney all organized the exhibit and were instrumental in its success. Because it has grown thanks to donations of old photos from past students, the now even bigger exhibit can also be seen at the Arts Festival the weekend of June 20th.

In addition to the photographs, three past principals were on hand to lend their version of the history of Osgood School. Kay Mulcahy, Jack Kramer, and Linda Whitney joined with present principal Marilee Cantelmo to celebrate. The gathering was a farewell of sorts, as the school will be moving to a new location in the coming school year. This is good news to second grade teacher Rose Collins, who said, "I've been teaching in the same building for the past 14 years and I'm so excited." The spirit of the residents of Cohasset helped make the original Osgood school special, and will surely make the new one special as well.



Even the rain could not dampen the spirit of the residents of Cohasset on Sunday. Although the parade and center stage activities had to be canceled due to a deluge, townspeople gathered under stormy skies to hear the Harborfest Band and watch the Blessing of the Fleet. Cohasset Harbor, set under low, gray clouds, provided a beautiful setting for this event.

Hopefully the ninth annual Harborfest weekend will coincide with some seasonably sunny weather and next year the public will get a chance to enjoy all the planned events from start to finish.

Additional sewer capacity possible in the future

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The sewer commission is moving ahead with plans to provide some form of subsidized sewer service to residents in North Cohasset. Sewer commissioners provided residents with three possible options at an informational meeting held last Thursday. And while at least one of these options will be put before voters at a special town meeting scheduled for this fall, the real story may be the possibility of the town acquiring additional sewer capacity in the near future — maybe.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild has asked Hull officials if they would be interested in selling the town an additional 50,000-80,000 gallons per day of sewer capacity. A second possibility is that the expanded Central Cohasset sewer plant, which is presently rated at 300,000 gallons of flow per day, may be able to utilize a cutting edge technology to increase the plant's capacity to 400,000 gallons per day. Neither alternative is currently approved. But, both methods could be viable for the future.

The benefits of additional capacity are obvious: more residents could hook into the town's sewer system. Guild said the current request for more capacity from Hull probably will not be approved this year.

"As of today, I am not optimistic," Guild said referring to the Hull request. "But at some future date, they may be interested. Meanwhile, we have approved a larger main for Jerusalem Road in case Hull changes its mind. At the moment, they're not considering our request, and I cannot foresee it at this time."

The benefits of additional capacity are obvious: more residents could hook into the town's sewer system.

The second possibility of additional capacity comes from a cutting edge design, called membrane technology, being used in the expanded Central Cohasset plant, scheduled to become operational by June 30, 2000. Guild said no municipal plant in the United States is currently using the membrane technology, although two municipal plants in Canada have used the design for less than one year. Engineers for the Central Cohasset project have visited the Canadian plants, and given their professional opinion that the new Cohasset plant could be operated at the higher flow rate.

"We believe additional capacity from the plant is possible, but that has not been demonstrated," Guild said. "Until we have the plant here, and have demonstrated the ability of operation at the higher flows, we are not prepared to rate it at a higher capacity."

Neither plan is assured right now, Guild said.

"There is the possibility of additional capacity from Hull and our own plant," Guild said. "Hull may be possible a few years down the road, and our plant will have to be tested first. But, in the future, there is a real possibility of more capacity."

Meanwhile, sewer commissioners are forging ahead with plans to hook North Cohasset residents into the Hull plant via the new Jerusalem Road main under the present contract with Hull. The sewer commissioners presented residents with three possible options at last week's sewer forum.

Previously, town meeting voters approved 50-50 funding for residents in the North Cohasset project. But the bids came in much higher than expected, at $2.7 million more than the $6.6 million allocated by town meeting. At last March's town meeting, a plan to borrow the additional $2.7 million failed because only 60 percent of town meeting voters approved the measure, which needed a two-thirds vote to pass. Later, selectmen also rejected the bids on contracts II, III and IV for North Cohasset, hoping for lower bids by sending all three parts of the project out to bid again, but this time as a single unit.

Under one of the options presented by the sewer commission for the North Cohasset project, residents would pay for the additional $2.7 million to complete the project with subsidized 20-year loans. Guild added that the costs could be higher if the new bids come in even higher. The sewer commission is planning to seek new bids in August or September, prior to the October town meeting.

The first option would be the cheapest by allowing everyone to use one contractor hired by the town to make all the connections. Guild said the average homeowner would pay $12,278 for a 20-year loan with state subsidized interest rates under this scenario.

The second scenario would cost the average homeowner $23,873. Using an analysis performed by Tutela Engineering, sewer commissioners are assuming that private contractors could do individual homes at 40 percent less than a municipal bidder because of state prevailing wage standards for public works projects. But higher interest rates for personal loans would add significantly to the cost under this scenario.

The third scenario would cost an average homeowner $17,677 over 20 years because the state would subsidize only the components, while homeowners would have to hire their own contractors for installation and acquire personal loans at higher interest rates for the cost of installation. Guild added that the cost could be lower for some homeowners because it may be possible for those residents who meet certain household income criteria to obtain lower interest loans than residents with higher household incomes.

Guild said he expects to put at least one of the options before town meeting in October, probably the first option, although sewer commissioners may decide to place options one and three in the warrant.

Volunteers sought for Osgood School move

The Joseph Osgood School Move Committee is looking for volunteers to help with the move to the new school. To save money, volunteers will be responsible for the packing and unpacking of classrooms and various offices, although the physical move of boxes will be handled professionally. Specifically, the committee is looking for volunteers on the following dates:

Packing of classrooms and offices at Joseph Osgood, Aug. 10 and 11 (Monday and Tuesday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Unpacking at new school, Aug. 27 and 28, (Thursday and Friday), 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Free baby-sitting will be provided. If you can help out, call Sarah Markert at 383-6124 or Cassandra Rioux at 383-2856 to sign up.

A busy month for police

As in most years, May was a busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were a total of 18 arrests during the month. Six were for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol. One [redacted] for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol and Assault and Battery on a Police Officer. There were five arrests for outstanding warrants. Three arrests were for Protective Custody. Also, there was an arrest for Illegal Possession of a Class B Substance and one arrest for Conspiracy to Violate the Controlled Substance Law. Finally, there was one arrest for Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon.

There were no Breaking and Enterings reported to the department during May, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During May the police department received a total of 653 calls for service. Of those, 91 were emergency 9-1-1 calls.

All officers of the police department completed their firearms requalifications at the Scituate Rod and Gun Club. The training was done by firearms instructor, Detective Frederick Grassie, Noonan said.

During May the police department received a total of 653 calls for service. Of those, 91 were emergency 9-1-1 calls.

On May 19, Noonan received the Executive Chief's Seminar Series FY98 Certificate for attending the six scheduled seminars which began Sept. 17. The topics discussed during this series were "Criminal Procedure," "Secretary of Public Safety," "Legislative Seminar," "Fair Labor Standards Act," "Stress Management" and, finally, "Budgeting and Planning in Law Enforcement." This series is a great way for chiefs to keep abreast of current trends in law enforcement.

Police were saddened to report the untimely death May 31 of one of their dispatchers, Lee Andrews, at the age of 54. Lee was a dedicated employee and a fine human being and he will be sorely missed by all, Noonan said.

Papers honored at Mass Press dinner

Cohasset Mariner gets honorable mention

Community Newspaper Company's South unit was honored with 16 editorial awards at the Massachusetts Press Association's annual dinner last Thursday at Boston University.

The Cohasset Mariner earned an honorable mention in the spot news category for a story and photograph by editor Mary Ford about a horse that was killed after it threw its rider and tried to bolt across rush-hour traffic on Route 3A last summer.

Of the 16 awards, six were for first place. The company's Rail Revival, a supplement published last September on the return of the Old Colony railroad line, won first place in the special sections category. Other first-place winners included: Braintree Forum editor Cathy Conley in both the editorial writing category and for environmental reporting; editor Helen Graves for a feature published in South Look; editor Alice Coyle in the general news category for the Scituate Mariner; and reporter Sarah Coffey for spot news coverage for the Kingston Mariner.

The Hingham Journal was also honored with a second-place award for general excellence. The Scituate Mariner won an honorable mention in that category.

"All of the awards represent hard work and dedication on the part of our entire editorial team, from reporters and editors to our photographers, graphic designers and editorial support personnel," said Mark Skala, editor of the South Shore unit of CNC. "These awards are an acknowledgment of commitment and focus we all have been investing in these newspapers. We are only as good as the communities we serve."

The MPA represents some 100 newspapers in the state. More than 75 newspapers entered this most recent contest with the judging conducted by a group of journalists from Canada.

Colgate University announces that Marnie DeMichele graduated "magna cum laude" May 17 with a bachelor of arts. She was elected to Phi Beta Kappa Honor Society and graduated with honors in geography. Marnie is the daughter of Don and Sue DeMichele, who are so very proud of her and her success! We are proud of you, too, Marnie, and now everyone can share the joy with you!

RESPECT FOR OUR FLAG

Received a nice note from Brenda Litchfield worthy of sharing: "While reading the Cohasset Mariner this week, I came across the photograph of Laura Kovach saluting the flag as the parade passed by. Being a past president of the George M. Mealy Post No. 118 Auxiliary, it pleased me so much. This little girl has been taught well regarding respect for our flag, and I applaud her and her parents. Every day Legion and Auxiliary members stress respect for the flag and it's refreshing to know that some do!"

A COHASSET WELCOME

Let us all give a huge Cohasset welcome to one of our latest newcomers, Andrew Joseph Rosano! Andrew was born May 21 at 8:24 a.m. and weighed 6 pounds 14 ounces — his mom and dad, Gina and Mario Rosano, are so happy, as are his sisters Laura and Melissa — and his big brother, Joseph, 'cause now he won't be "outnumbered." His maternal grandmother is Matilda Agostino of Hingham. What a wonderful family, congratulations to you all!

RELAY FOR LIFE

What a wonderful weekend last weekend turned out to be; more than 500 people participated in The Relay for Life, held at Alumni Field on the Charles Davis Track. It was deemed an unqualified success; they relayed their way to raising more than $35,000 for cancer research (all of which goes locally)! It was an emotional evening, full of fun and good will — outstanding! Hopefully everyone took time to "smell the flowers." Sam Esposito did a beautiful job planting the bricks and the rock, making it a cheerful and picture-perfect entrance. If by chance you haven't seen this glorious display yet, be sure to do so! And be sure to thank Sammy who has his nursery on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (No. 585).

HATS OFF TO FRANKIE

Congratulations to Frankie Rosano, who will graduate from Cohasset High School this Saturday! His parents, Geraldine and Veto, and sister Marylou are proud of him, as are all of his relatives and friends! Here's to a very happy future, Frankie!

COLLEGE GRADUATE

Kudos to Jessica DeLorenzo on her recent graduation from Castleton State College in Vermont. Jessica received her degree with a major in elementary education and sociology. She distinguished herself by being selected to Kappa Delta Pi, an Educational Honor Society. Jessica is currently interviewing for an elementary teaching position on the South Shore, and we wish her every success in her efforts!

FEATURED ARTIST

Cynthia Grilli, daughter of Lesley and Don Grilli, is featured in this month's issue of "American Artist Magazine," and it is a grand article, indeed! Complete with some of her beautiful art work (in oils), it also has her explain how she achieves her creations. Cynthia is a 1992 graduate of Rhode Island School of Design, and a 1994 graduate of New York Academy of Art graduate school; she is now teaching art at St. John's University in Jamaica, N.Y., and in the summer program at the Rhode Island School of Design. To find out more about her work, you can visit her Web site at http://idt.net/~grillart. Do it, her work is absolutely breathtaking!

10TH CHS REUNION

Attention, CHS Class of 1988 graduates — The Lelecas brothers (Mike and Nicholas) are hoping that you are holding a reunion this year, and that you will get in touch with them when you plan it! Michael is with the government's Justice Department at Newark International Airport, and Nicholas is in Tulsa, Okla., an attorney (and a Tulsa University grad.) Please get in touch with them through their dad, Peter Lelecas, at 30 Forest Notch, Cohasset, and he will forward all information to them.

BACHELOR'S DEGREE

Hats off to Colby R. Lawrence, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robin Lawrence, who received a bachelor of arts degree from Emory University at its 153rd commencement ceremony May 11.

OUTSTANDING SCHOLAR

Brian Duffy, son of Rosemary and Daniel F.X. Duffy, has been recognized by the German consulate in Boston for his work at UMass/Amherst. Duffy was recognized for his outstanding scholarship in German courses. He received a certificate and German language book as part of his award. Brian is a member of the Class of 1999, majoring in German and French at the uni-

'Painters of Boston' comes to Cohasset

Susan Pope admires Ros Farbush's "Old Dorchester Heights" on exhibit at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

The Paul Pratt Library has brought Boston to Cohasset in a new exhibit entitled "Painters of Boston with Ros Farbush." The show, which has been arranged through the South Shore Art Center, will be on display until July. The featured group of watercolorists meets in the city for a week each summer to paint with renowned Cohasset artist and instructor Ros Farbush, and includes Elizabeth Burke (Hingham), JoAnne Chittick (Cohasset), Patricia McCarthy (Cohasset), Rod Peterson (Malden), Page Railsback (New York City) and Mary Ann Wall (Marshfield).

With a variety of viewpoints and styles — in watercolor, acrylic, and ink and wash, the colorful works depict favorite cityscapes and landmark buildings from Beacon Hill, South Boston, Back Bay and the South End.

MAY I PRESENT

Grilled lamb chops for Father's Day

For Father's Day I like to plan ahead to make the meal a special one — this year we will be having an outdoor barbecue. Barbecues seem to cast a happy spell over both young and old (who can resist the tantalizing sight or smell of food sizzling away on the grill?), and nothing sharpens the appetite as quickly. Grilled foods are delicious, easy to fix; fun to eat.

This year I am going to grill lamb chops! They are so tempting, so tender! Select top quality one-to-two inch chops. They should be crusty brown on the outside, juicy and delicately pink on the inside. To test for doneness, make a small slash in the chop near the bone and look at the color of the meat. It should be juicy and have a faint pink color. With the lamb chops I will have baked beans, hot rolls, salad, assorted relishes ... I also put pepper halves, whole tomatoes and onions on the grill at the end of the cooking time.

This baked bean recipe is different from our "typical" New England one, everyone enjoys it!

FATHER'S DAY BAKED BEANS

1 large can B&M kidney beans with juice
1 pkg. frozen lima beans
3 small onions; chopped
2 tbsp. dark Karo syrup
1/2 cup catsup
2 tbsp. vinegar
2 tbsp. brown sugar
2 tbsp Worcestershire sauce
salt and pepper to taste

Mix all of the ingredients, bake in a 300-degree oven approximately 2 hours.

For dessert, try a fresh fruit compote with lemon sherbet — use lots of melon and green grapes! Enjoy!

OPINION

Cuts hit close to home

Federal officials are asking people to swallow a bitter pill they claim will improve the financial health of Medicare and balance the federal budget.

What they aren't telling us is that ultimately their plan to slash Medicare costs will have a sickening impact on those who need the funding the most — the elderly, handicapped and homebound.

There's no question fraud and waste abound in many federal programs and we applaud our leaders for looking at where we can reduce excess spending. We might suggest they start with their own budgets for political junkets, like the recent example of how several U.S. Senators attended a weekend-long schmooze fest in Nantucket with Canadian officials. Word from the Senators was they had big meetings and plans to discuss with our neighbors to the north. What they didn't reveal was few meetings, if any, were attended and most were out wining and dining. This, of course, was all on the taxpayers tab — to the tune of $100,000 for the weekend. Now that's excessive.

Instead these same Senators and their peers are more interested in targeting what they call the pork: Medicare. In their zeal to balance the budget many of our esteemed congressmen have lost sight of a few things. They are seeing the budget strictly from a numbers and figures point of view. At least that's what their actions are telling us.

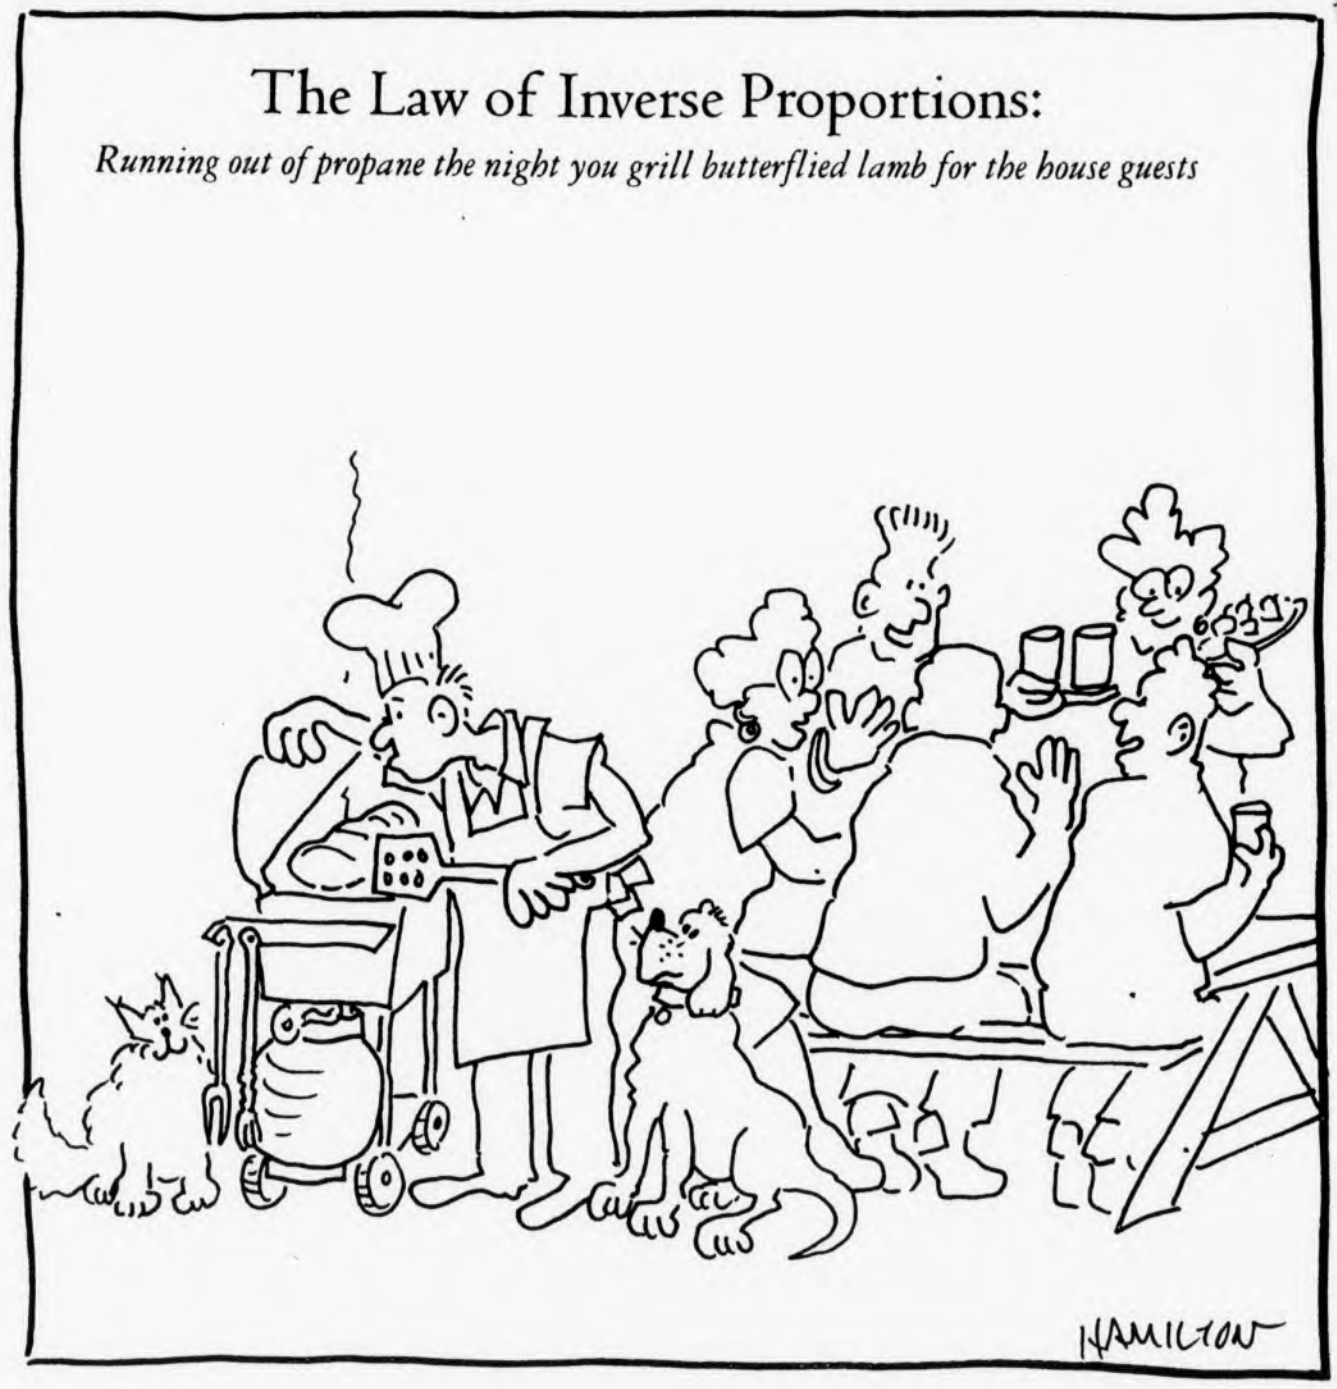
Those of us who have elderly parents and grandparents or a handicapped family member know all too well there is a very real and personal side to this budget story. Cutting Medicare's home health care reimbursement program will have a devastating impact on the South Shore and beyond.

We cared for our elderly grandmother until her fight ended last June. We couldn't have done it without the aid of home health care workers who took the time to care for someone in their final days. Madeleine needed care round-the-clock near the end, unable to complete simple tasks for herself, such as getting up to go to the bathroom, making a meal or putting on her makeup. It was a difficult thing for this proud woman to accept, someone who always took great effort to look and feel her best.

She was fortunate enough to have the resources to pay for care in her home — at the height it was close to $3,000 per week. Her only wish to us was that she remain in her home as long as possible. We were able to honor that wish, thanks to the help of our home health aides. Her system of care was not a perfect one. Some took advantage of her, some even helped themselves to her personal belongings. For the most part, though, she had caring and dedicated home health aides who treated her like family and allowed her to maintain some semblance of dignity to the end. You can't put a price on that.

There are countless other stories we can tell you about people in dire need without the resources to pay for private care. Like the middle-aged woman who is debilitated by MS. She currently receives about $50,000 a year in services, but her local Visiting Nurse Association, under the proposal by Congress, may have to cut her back to about $8,000 per year. The solution: Her husband will have to be trained to take on the added duties the VNA will no longer be able to afford to do.

This latest proposal from Congress dictates no one can be denied service and VNAs can't cut someone off. Yet our Senators are saying they plan to cut Medicare funding for home health care back to 1994 levels. To look at it from a strictly numbers point of view, that would mean, for example, the South Shore Hospital VNA network would have to cut about $4 million out of its $20 million budget. The Norwell VNA had a budget of $1.6 million in 1994 versus $2.8 million in 1997, serving a 15 percent increase in clients from 1994 to 1997.



But like we said, this is not just about budgets and figures. This is about the well-being of our parents, grandparents, family and friends. We are all for balancing the budget and cutting fat out of the federal budget, but not at the expense of our loved ones.

There has to be a better way. We urge you to call our Reader Response Line (781-837-4654) and join us in speaking out against these ill-advised cuts in home health care. We need to urge our politicians to think out of the box and come up with more creative solutions. We need to let them know this isn't what we want to happen and they need to follow our directives. They are in Washington to represent our best interests and clearly this can't be in our best interest.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Proposal for sewer accord

To the Editor:

This letter is being sent because it is apparent to me and others, that a deepening rift is developing between a group of concerned citizens and the sewer commission as to what is a good and fair course of action for waste water management. It should be pointed out first, that my home is one of those designated by the sewer commission for examination and possible remediation under Title 5.

My proposal is as follows:

1. That the sewer commission's jurisdiction over septic systems be returned or reaffirmed to the Board of Health.

2. That any plans, including projects underway, be reviewed by the selectmen, and that their governance over these projects be re-established and retained.

3. That the Board of Selectmen establish a waste-water commission in support of Mr. R.M. Campbell's idea, which shall have the power to work with the D.E.P. to oversee the quality of our sensitive coast and harbor waters.

In my opinion, the selectmen should have the ultimate authority in the decision-making process so that a true consensus will be achieved.

Planning council tackles important regional issues

MY VIEW

MARTHA GJESTBY

Since 1981 I have been the MAPC representative from Cohasset. The regional planning agencies (there are 13 in Massachusetts) help the communities to orderly develop land use, infrastructure, housing, economic development and zoning. These councils also comment to the Mass. Environmental Protection Agency (MEPA) on Environmental notification projects (ENF) and Environmental reviews (EIR) if significant for a city or town.

When I became a representative the area of transportation was my initial interest. Our immediate task was the EIR for the Central Artery/Third Harbor tunnel. We approved the report with suggestions and an oversight committee was established. In conjunction with the project, Secretary Hoyt of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) established a mitigation committee to study the feasibility of restoration of the Old Colony commuter rail to help him with the environmental decision. I was selected as a regional representative to the committee. After Plymouth and Middleboro lines were approved, a new committee was established to study the Greenbush line. We are still in existence but we are waiting for the Army Corps report to continue our work for Secretary Coxe. Note — We comment only on the material presented to us by the MBTA and not on the merits of the project.

At the same time, I was elected to the executive committee of MAPC for a 10-year period. I also served as treasurer, asst. treasurer and secretary for the organization. We went to national and regional meetings and many of the ideas of regional cooperation I have shared with the town.

Through the years there have been many local projects — Sunrise assisted living, docks at the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Roy estate in Cohasset Harbor, and recently the harbor dredging for example. These have been reviewed by some of our boards and myself as to the environmental concerns.

In 1990, MAPC presented its Metro 2000 plan for land use in the Boston region. This report comprised of several years' work. One of the concepts in the reports is the Concentrated Development Centers (CDC) for cities and towns. Quincy was recently approved as a CDC, and perhaps Cohasset Village as well as 3A business area could be considering the future. I was part of the task force that worked on the Metro 2000 project.

Within the last few years, the Metropolitan Planning Organization (MPO) was expanded to allow cities and towns more say in transportation projects using federal funds. Cities and town representatives are elected and partake in this approval of projects to be funded. The Beechwood culvert is a project for Cohasset.

The Cohasset Heights landfill EIR has been one of the most widely reviewed in MEPA's history. Not only did town boards, but many citizens and surrounding towns review the application initially until the final EIR was approved. The many issues of expansion, height variance, and wetlands violations are in the purview of the Board of Health, Conservation Commission and Board of Appeal. These boards have protected us.

The Sewer Commission's sewer plan for the Central district did not receive the same scrutiny by Cohasset town boards. The final report was commented by the Board of Health. If all the town boards had commented on the draft EIR and citizens had been more informed of the process, the citizens could have affected changes for the better. The Attorney General would not have had to step in and order the town to sewer the Lily Pond areas and test the Little Harbor area water for sewerage. I reviewed and submitted comments on the Cohasset Heights Landfill and Central sewer districts EIRS.

The future is bright for Cohasset. Water service, continual maintenance, mitigation of the Greenbush line, renovation of school buildings, sewering of 3A business area (proximity to Lily Pond) and the impending dredging of the harbor — all are projects that are needed in the next 10 years. To be successful the boards of the town must allow the voters ample time to discuss the costs and benefits of each one.

It is with bittersweet feeling the time has come to resign as MAPC representative for Cohasset.

Eliminating obfuscatory language

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

President Bill Clinton has named Vice President Al Gore to lead the charge against obfuscation in government.

"The federal government's writing must be in plain language," said Bill in a memo. "By using plain language. We send a clear message about what the government is doing, what it requires, and what services it offers."

By next October, the president decreed, all new government documents must be written in "plain language" and by the year 2002 all documents written before October will have to be rewritten.

Good luck to them.

Jimmy Carter tried it in 1978 with Executive Order #12044 requiring that all federal regulations be written in plain English.

That was five years before the Department of Energy came up with this doozie:

"Nothing in these regulations precludes the secretary or his delegate from designating information not specifically described in this regulation as unclassified unclear information."

Or the State Department said that it would no longer use the word "killing" in its human rights reports but would substitute the phrase "unlawful or arbitrary deprivation of life."

"We found the term 'killing' too broad and have substituted the more precise, if more verbose, 'unlawful or arbitrary deprivation of life,'" said Elliott Abrams, the assistant secretary for human rights.

Abrams was the same civil servant who admitted he lied to Congress during the Iran/Contra hearings because he "wasn't authorized to tell the truth."

Or figure out what they said in this report from the U. S. Department of Education:

"In other words, feediness is the shared information between the toputness, where toputness is a time just prior to the inputness."

Or the plaintive correction offered by Col. David Opfer, air attache in Cambodia in 1974, when reporters unwittingly described the dropping of explosives from airplanes in flight as "bombing."

"You always write it's bombing, bombing, bombing. It's not bombing. It's air support."

Or Alexander Haig when he was secretary of state, describing the murder of three American nuns in El Salvador:

"I'd like to suggest to you that some of the investigation would lead one to believe that perhaps the vehicle the nuns were riding in may have tried to run a roadblock, or may have accidentally have been perceived as having been doing so, and there'd been an exchange of fire and then perhaps those who inflicted the casualties sought to cover it up.

"And this could have been at a very low level of both competence and motivation in the context of the issue itself. But the facts on this are not clear enough for anyone to draw a definite conclusion."

Any questions?

The Pentagon is famous for such obfuscatory phrases, like "collateral damage" for dead civilians, or "terminated with extreme prejudice" for someone who has just been killed.

Or the nuclear power industry, which describes an explosion as "energetic disassembly," a fire as "rapid oxidation," and an accident as an "unscheduled event" or a "normal aberration."

Walter Dernberger, who was in charge of the Germans' Peenemunde Rocket Research Institute in World War II, said he got better cooperation on requisitions to Berlin when he spoke a language the bureaucrats could understand.

So a pencil sharpener became "an appliance for milling wooden dowels up to 10 millimeters in diameter" and a typewriter "an instrument for recording test data with rotating roller."

Perhaps when Bill and Al are through with the bureaucrats on the home turf they could convert some of corporate America to plain English, too.

Like the National Airlines folks who described the demise of one of its planes as the "involuntary conversion of a 747."

It meant that it crashed.

Comments on library proposal

TO TOWN OFFICIALS AND LIBRARY TRUSTEES

Regarding your recent summary in the Cohasset Mariner of needs for the Cohasset Public Library, I submit the following:

Needs: Why did Library Trustees abandon two branch libraries, i.e. N. Cohasset and Beechwood Branch? Was this long-range planning?

Solution: If space for computers and video library is needed, consider a reading room and video library by renting or purchasing the Samuel Bates House in downtown Cohasset. This would give volume and pedestrian traffic a perfect place to browse with meeting rooms etc. This also would re-vitalize the downtown area. Keep Paul Pratt Library noting its historic background. The Town of Cohasset has lost too many of its historic assets.

Reasons regarding re-use of Osgood School:

It was voted at Town Meeting to put this school back on tax rolls to help with upcoming debt costs. Also, in the Town Warrant, Capital Long Range items are listed by priority and town officials should follow the procedure. Our tax rate is sky-rocketing and will continue to do so.

Networking for library should take the following into consideration:

Old Colony Network now in operation for new books and requests.

Fact, all Cohasset schools have librarians and libraries.

All schools are being computerized with Networking available.

Reasoning in Library Article in Mariner:

"Space needs for library conversion to computers."

In conclusion, I would state that I am a constant reader at the library and as a child, the Beechwood Branch was my biggest joy. Noting that my number was 1191, I availed myself of any and all it had to offer.

I also believe that the mandate of Town Meeting should be adhered to and the proposal should be for Senior Housing, which does have a need and priority. If the Trustees would consider my solution, both uses could be taken care of.

Brown's efforts appreciated

MS. ROSEANN MCMORRIS
CHAIRPERSON
BOARD OF SELECTMEN

I want to let you know that one of your colleagues on the board performed beyond the call of duty. We certainly appreciated his efforts and wanted you to know about it.

On Sunday, I went to the Recycling Facility to purchase my permit, and I left my car registration in the RTF office. I only realized I left it there after the RTF was closed. I tracked down the employee, who remembered that he left it on the desk. Although the office would next be open Wednesday, I could, he indicated, call the DPW, which could open the RTF Monday.

However, in checking with the Police Dept., I found I really shouldn't be driving without my registration, and I called Merle Brown, who arranged to meet me at the RTF, and he opened the door so I could get the registration.

We certainly appreciated what Merle did. We always realized he was a nice person, but his willing to help exemplified the small-town, willing to provide extra service that we hope continues to be a characteristic of Cohasset. We want to thank him again, and we think you should be proud of the service provided by your colleague.

Arthur S. Morgenstern
7 Linden Dr.

Editor's note: this letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Government Island improvement project

DEAR HAROLD (LITCHFIELD) AND CREW:

The overall job you and your crew did is great. I could almost say "perfect," but is anything perfect? Yes, I'll list the jobs done.

1. The blacktopping of the wharf, parking area and road came out very well. It needed it badly as you well know.

2. The establishment of parking spaces by striping will help in parking more vehicles and, of course, the spot for the handicapped was essential.

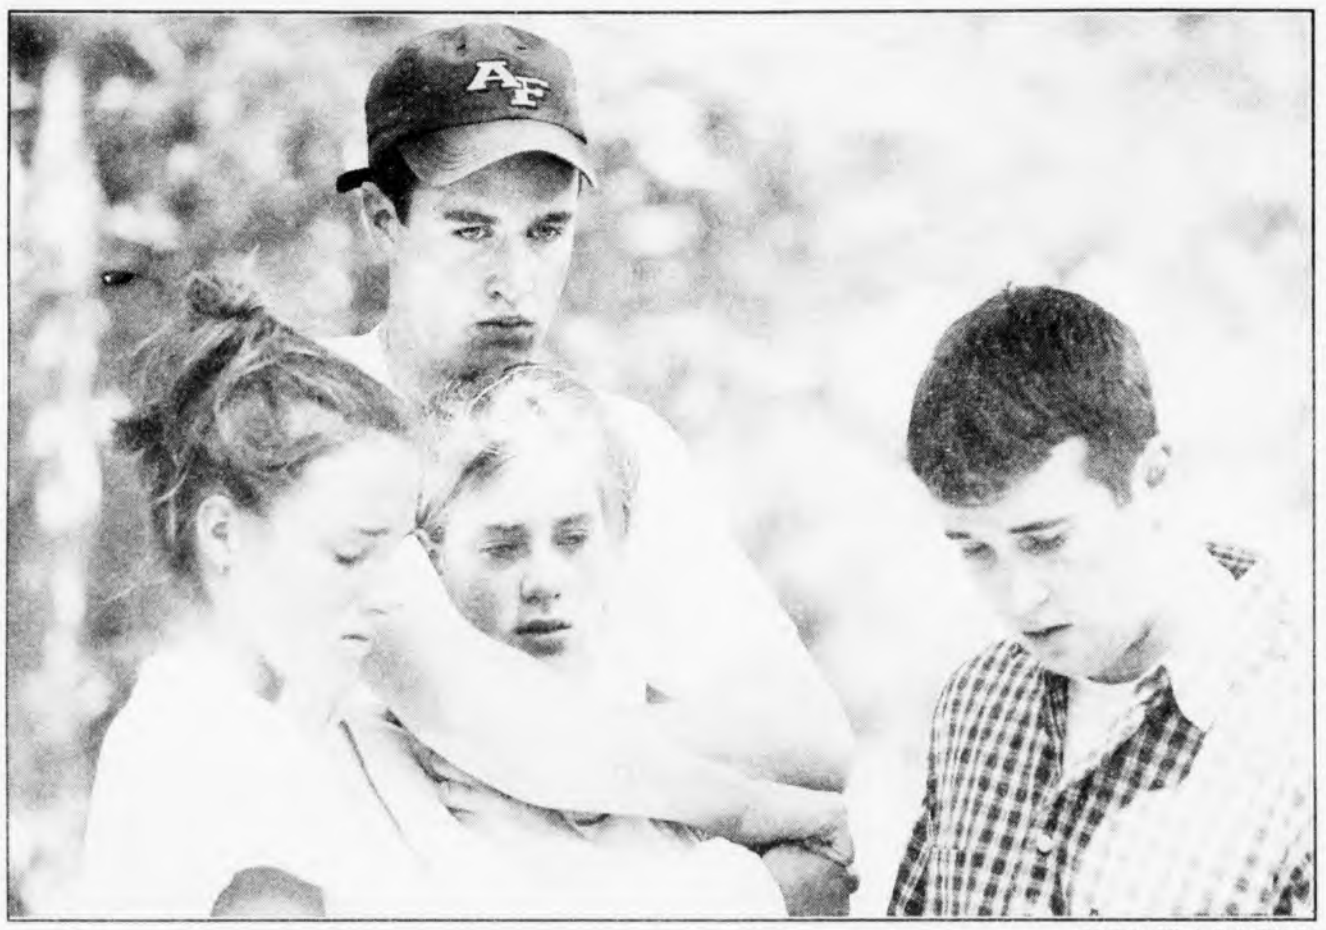
3. The granite blocks along the park will last forever vs. the railroad ties and they look good, too.

4. The new chains and links around the templates had to be done and your crew did the job right.

5. The small circle near the Sailing Club needed attention badly and you did it. The Cape Cod berm around it with added loam and the rocks will hopefully keep it for walking and sitting instead of parking.

6. The new railroad ties along by the Replica keep the Government Island Park in its natural state as much as possible.

7. The stone platform for the bell needed trimming and recementing and someone of your crew did it well — it looks good.



There were probably other miscellaneous jobs done as part of the overall, overdue repair and renovation of Cohasset's "Diamond in the Rough" — Government Island. Let me know what I left out.

Thank you for a job well done from the Government Island Study Committee. Yes and from the town too.

lacrosse team. He also put in four years as a basketball referee working with youngsters through the recreation department. Corcoran planned to attend Endicott College in the fall but seemed ambivalent about leaving Cohasset. The school had meant something special to him.

"Cohasset meant a lot to Bourke," DeLorenzo said. For instance, on Seniors Day, after everyone left the building, DeLorenzo found Corcoran sitting by himself behind a table at the end of the corridor.

"I'm really sad," Corcoran told him. "I don't want to leave this place."

When DeLorenzo saw a "little tear" in Corcoran's eye, he gave the boy a hug and reassured him people have to go in different directions.

"It was good for both of us," he said.

He also remembered talking to Corcoran the same day he died. DeLorenzo's voice wavered when he remembered saying he would see him "in the morning and stuff." Corcoran is the first student to die in DeLorenzo's 12 years at Cohasset High. It is a record that shows the kind of effort the school has made to keep the prom nights and graduation parties safe.

On Seniors Day, after everyone left the building, DeLorenzo found Corcoran sitting by himself behind a table at the end of the corridor. "I'm really sad," Corcoran told him. "I don't want to leave this place." When DeLorenzo saw a "little tear" in Corcoran's eye, he gave the boy a hug and reassured him people have to go in different directions.

But effort did not seem to matter now. DeLorenzo went to Sandy Beach to be with the students at 8 a.m. yesterday. Sandy Beach is the place the students always go when something happens, bad or good, according to guidance counselor Mary Babaian.

"If you know anything about this community, you know it's the meeting place. The kids go to Sandy Beach when they get their driver's licenses," she said or when they want to think.

Many of Corcoran's friends went there to grieve and remember. Few seniors stayed at school. Others wandered alone down Pond Street, fighting back tears.

"We were hugging each other and crying," said Rob Buckley, 18, one of several who made the trip to the beach. He knew Corcoran since second grade, although they had gone separate ways the last year at Cohasset High. It was Buckley's neighbor who called 911 shortly after 11 p.m. His mother heard the crash and ran to the neighbor for help.

Atherton was also on the beach. There were counselors trying to help the students deal with their feelings. Most students were in shock, according to principal Curtis Collins. Collins, who looked grim and sad, said a number of the town's religious leaders and counselors arrived at school by 7 a.m. The school followed the crisis intervention plan. Ironically, the administration had just retooled the procedures this year.

"We were right on top of that," he said. "But it doesn't help."

The seniors voted to cancel the class awards night which was scheduled for Wednesday. Instead, the school cafeteria will stay open for people who want to come in and talk. Funeral arrangements for Corcoran are supposed to be decided by Thursday afternoon, according to the McNamara Sparrell funeral home. The telephone number is 383-0200.

Cohasset High seniors, only a few days ago, were ready to be off on separate adventures full of the ambition the young bring to a world to be conquered. Their yearbook teemed with familiar quotations about self-reliance and courage such as these words of F. Scott Fitzgerald.

"The world exists only in your eyes—your conception of it, you can make it as big or small as you want it to be." But Corcoran wrote a quotation for himself, referring to his reputation for always being right..

"Even when I'm wrong, I get my point across," it read. Ironically, he mentioned dying when he wrote down his thoughts about leaving Cohasset High.

"In the event of my demise, when my heart can bear no more, I hope I die for a principle or belief I have lived for."

road."

Police hoped they had escaped the prom and graduation season without any major accidents after the prom was trouble-free, Noonan said.

"We were just happy everybody made it through prom night," he said.

PALS Officer Lisa Matos, who works with students throughout the year, said the department provides extensive education about drinking and driving but not much on the dangers of speeding. Officers will call parents of teenagers pulled over for speeding, she said, to try to prevent them from continued offenses.

Corcoran was a member of the lacrosse team for two years. He planned to play lacrosse when he entered Endicott College this fall.

He had one sister, Elizabeth, 20.

Town to lobby for Greenbush train mitigation

the Greenbush Mitigation Committee — appointed by selectmen to negotiate with the MBTA — laid the situation out in a joint meeting with both boards this week.

"Talking mitigation with the T is like talking to this desk," said mitigation chairman Tom Gruber, asking for guidance on what strategy to pursue.

"We need to turn to you to find out what you would like to have us do under these conditions."

Selectmen Merle Brown and Tom Callahan — who oppose the train — did not need much push to suggest Cohasset join Hingham in actively opposing the project. That view was supported by mitigation committee members Michael Dick and Martin Corry.

(Hingham selectmen are unanimous in their opposition to the train which they say will destroy the town's historic square which is on the National Register of Historic Places. Hingham has a lawsuit pending which alleges the T is paying for the Greenbush line only with state dollars to skirt the federal government's stricter environmental regulations which click in when historic places are impacted by projects funded by federal dollars).

Dick, a mitigation committee member, suggested Cohasset first seek help from the legislature to get additional money for mitigation measures.

"We cannot be asked to provide land for the railroad and get one house with full (noise) mitigation, eight with partial mitigation and no help with flooding," said Dick, adding the only thing the town gets in return is transportation to Boston and higher property values.

"That's not enough in my opinion for what we will have to deal with."

Peter Guldberg of Tech Environmental, which prepared the report, challenged many of the T's conclusions in its environmental impact report.

He said the T did not add in the pollution from diesel locomotives when it calculated the air quality benefits of removing cars from the highway.

Guldberg said the T also overstated the air quality benefits of the railroad by using an average speed of 20 mph to calculate the pollution caused by cars when in reality cars travel faster than that along Routes 3 and 3A. The more slowly cars travel, the more pollution they cause, he said.

"Talking mitigation with the T is like talking to this desk."

TOM GRUBER,

MITIGATION COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

He explained that while federal regulations will soon require cleaner commercial diesel locomotives, urban rail lines will have longer to comply.

Guldberg also challenged the T's method of determining the impact of noise along the railroad right of way. He explained the T used the federal standard of averaging the decibel level over 24 hours. He said that method works well for urban rail lines that get a lot of traffic but skews the results for a line like Greenbush.

Guldberg said the T should put down a concrete rather than asphalt base where ballast mats are used to lessen vibration. He said federal guidelines recommend the use of concrete in these areas and the town can point to those guidelines in its negotiations with the T.

Gruber, the mitigation committee chairman, said he was not pleased with the T's response to the town's request for flood impact calculations, which were promised but not received. He said the T said the "kiss and ride" drop off on North Main Street which would include a pedestrian access to the station is not a dead issue as the committee had hoped. And now the MBTA is arguing with the state Department of Environmental Protection over the Sohier Street well fields, which abut the right of way.

Selectman Callahan said while he supported the lobbying effort with the goal of getting more attention and more money for mitigation, the bottom line even if those efforts are successful may come down to supporting or opposing the train.

"We may be put in the position of facing the decision of whether we want it or not," he said.

But Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the board must stay focused on the task at hand.

"If the train is coming through, then we must do everything we can to mitigate its effects," she said.

Losing patients over home health care cuts

ject out like ragged mountain peaks.

"I got this taking care of him," she says, as she shows the nurse her ravaged back.

Worse yet, Mattie's voice dwindled to a mere whisper about six months ago. By the end of the day, he's exhausted from trying to communicate and she's exhausted from trying to hear what he's saying.

"It's frustrating,' he says.

Parkinson's is a chronic, progressive disease. Millie doesn't want to think what the future holds if she becomes too frail to help her husband get in and out of his wheelchair.

"I hate to think about it," she says. "I don't think about it."

Another challenge lurks in Mattie's near future. After four years serving his country in time of war and 37 years toiling to maintain Boston's schools, Mattie has discovered the federal government wants to balance Medicare's budget by imposing a cap on the amount of money home health care providers can receive for taking care of him and other patients.

The cost-containment method chosen by the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), a division of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, caps reimbursement for each patient at a percentage of the agency's 1993-94 budget. Although South Shore agencies have yet to receive official notification of their maximum reimbursement level per patient, similar agencies in other parts of the country have been told they must serve even the most challenging patients for no more than $1,500 to $4,000. (See related story.)

According to Meg Doherty, executive director of Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, some of the patients on her roster cost as much as $50,000 a year to maintain at home. And the fallout is already happening. On May 7, Easter Seals of Massachusetts announced it could not afford to provide home health care services with such unreasonable cuts.

Life, for Mattie, already has dwindled to the size of the small summer cottage on the South Shore they winterized and moved to four years ago when it became impossible for him to maneuver the stairs in their South Boston home. Getting outside is a production — Mattie must move from his wheelchair to a walker to traverse the step separating the dining room from the back entry and a shallow flight of stairs leading outdoors.

Getting to bed is an even greater challenge. Together they position his wheelchair near his bed. Millie struggles to push him up out of the chair as best she can.

"I fall right in," he says. "She straightens my legs out and covers me with the blankets."

Most of his days are spent watching television and talking with Millie. On weekends, he looks forward to spending time with the two of their six children who live nearby.

The man who once prided himself on his ability to "fix anything," now relies on a cadre of home health aides who come five days a week to assist him with the activities he once took for granted, things like showering, shaving and getting dressed. On the weekends, he must ask his son to handle that duty. A visiting nurse comes once a week to check his blood pressure and monitor his health.

It's hard to put a price tag on continuity of care. Sometimes symptoms are subtle. An older patient doesn't experience the crushing chest pain that alerts middle-aged men they are having a heart attack.

"I start to lose my breath," explains Adolph Wacker, 84, a home health care patient living in Scituate.

A visiting nurse checks Wacker once a week, looking for clues that would show whether trouble is looming.

Wacker had five heart attacks, including a cardiac arrest, within a 15-month span. He also has a pace maker to regulate his heart rhythm. The hands that once deftly wielded butcher's knives tremble uncontrollably from Parkinson's disease. Wacker also suffers from diabetes. He's tethered to an oxygen pump because of chronic obstructive lung disease that leaves him vulnerable to pneumonia.

His rapid decline made it necessary for Wacker and his now-deceased wife, Stephanie, to leave his Connecticut home and move in with their daughter, Barbara Steiglitz.

"It was obvious he couldn't go home and care for my mother any more," Steiglitz says.

Steiglitz couldn't do it alone, either. A registered nurse, Steiglitz works three days a week for a long-term care facility in Dorchester. Although her mother, who suffered from advanced Parkinson's disease, could be left alone for short periods of time at first, it didn't last long.

"She wandered," she said. "She would get to the end of the driveway and wouldn't know how to get back to the house – and there's a swamp across the street and conservation land that goes almost to Norwell."

At the end, both Stephanie's mind and body failed badly.

"She needed total care," Steiglitz said. "She was in diapers, she was senile and she could barely walk."

Steiglitz put together a patchwork of family care, home health services and what Wacker himself calls "my private baby-sitter" to keep the two of them safe and healthy.

Stephanie Wacker died Sept. 27, just a week shy of their 59th wedding anniversary.

Wacker says they met when a fire alarm went off.

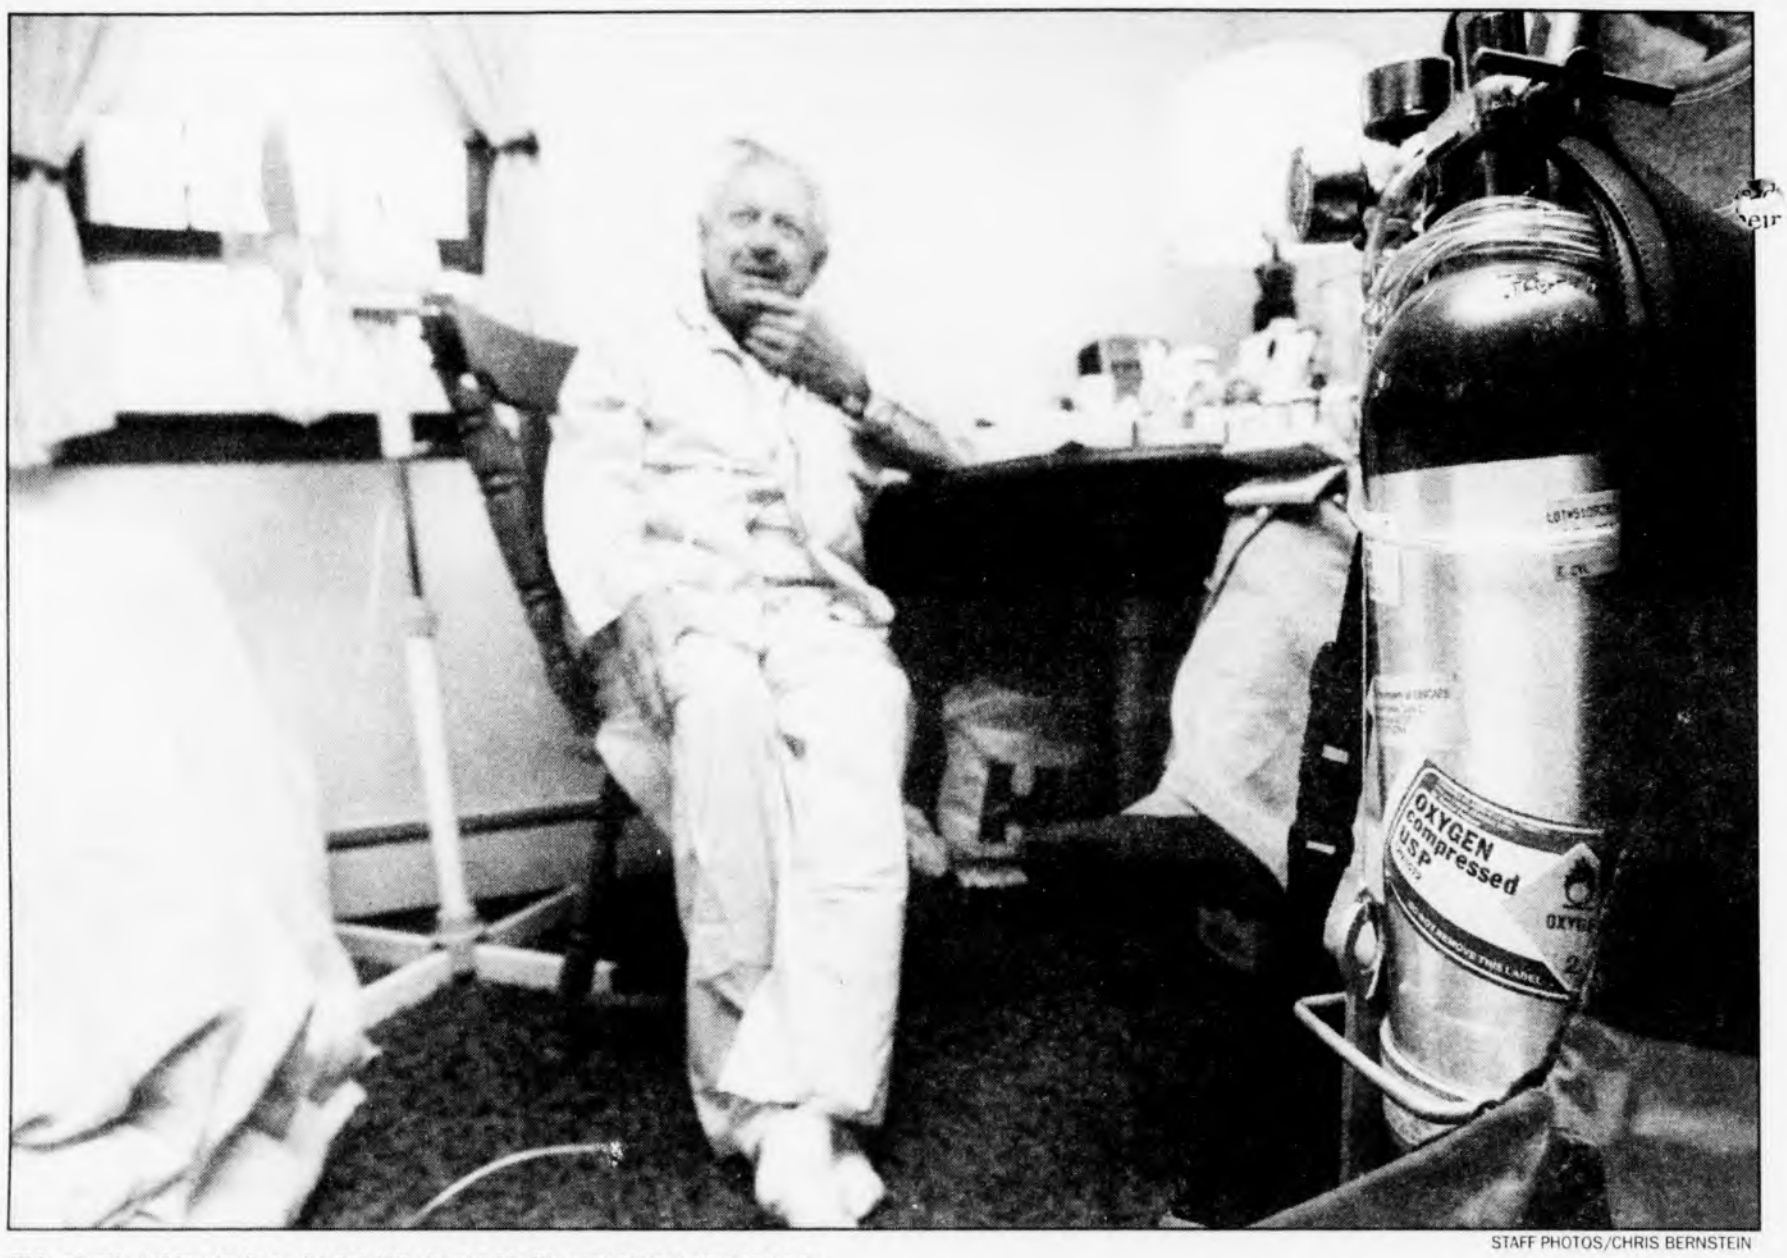
"She asked me what happened," he recollected. "We got to talking, I walked her home. We started dating and a year later we got married."

The two were very close, he says. It remains a marvel to him, perhaps because his father died when he was two, his mother when he was seven.

"My brothers and sisters took care of me until I was 16. Then I was on my own," he explains. "We got married when I was 24."

Wacker is a favorite with his caregivers.

Home Health Aide Anne Marie Foley comes two mornings a week. She helps Wacker get up and dressed, brings him downstairs and makes his breakfast. The two of them swap recipe tips.



"He's an incredible cook," Foley says. "His soups are wonderful. I'm trying to get him to write a cook book."

A male home health aide, Frank Serra, comes once a week to help Wacker shower. Although Wacker would like to have a shower more frequently, especially in the hot, humid season, Medicare won't cover the costs because he isn't incontinent.

The combination of lung disease and Parkinson's makes him increasingly frail.

"I try to walk up to the end of the

In all of Massachusetts 200,000 Medicare or private pay clients are serviced by 174 agencies

Government looks to slash billions

By Alison Cohen
STAFF WRITER

People who administer and oversee home health care on the South Shore believe elderly and disabled citizens who rely on Medicare will pay the price for the federal government's plan to slash as much as $4.2 billion in home health care expenditures.

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), a division of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, implemented a pair of cost-containment schemes that could drive home health care providers out of business. On May 7, Easter Seals of Massachusetts announced plans to drop its home health services to disabled clients, claiming HCFA's Draconian cutbacks make it impossible to provide services to people with disabilities, chronic medical conditions and complex medical problems without raiding its budget for other essential services.

HCFA's Administrator Nancy-Ann Min DeParle took a meat cleaver to the home health care budget, ostensibly to comply with the requirements of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 which is intended to curb spiraling costs in the Medicare budget. Under the old payment system, home health agencies were reimbursed according to their costs.

DeParle implemented a complicated payment scale that holds home health care agencies to a percentage of their 1994 budget.

Under this scheme, home health agencies will receive a maximum per beneficiary limit calculated by taking 75 percent of their 1994 budget less two percent and adding to it 25 percent of the region's average cost per patient in the same period. The agency will be required to reimburse the federal government for any costs above this limit.

This blunderbuss approach to cost-containment favors agencies that spent money willy-nilly five years ago, and hits frugal agencies in regions with moderate costs – such as New England – hardest.

According to Meg Doherty, executive director of the Visiting Nurse Association of Norwell, the per beneficiary limit makes no sense for an industry that provides services to an ever-increasing population of frail elders and disabled persons with increasingly debilitating conditions.

"Our budget was $1.6 million in 1994," Doherty said. "In 1997, we served 15 percent more patients than in 1994 and our budget was up to $2.8 million."

The Norwell VNA isn't the only South Shore agency facing daunting cuts.

"South Shore Visiting Nurse Association . . . will see an annual reduction in reimbursements of at least $4 million on a $20 million base," said David T. Hannon, president and chief executive officer of South Shore Hospital.

Most every VNA and agency providing home health care expects to have to cut their budget by 25 percent. In Massachusetts, that will impact more than 200,000 people who rely on Medicare or private pay to get home health care provided by 174 agencies in the commonwealth.

Cura Visiting Nurse Association, which serves patients in Duxbury, Kingston, Plympton, Carver, Plymouth and Wareham, also expects the cuts to impact more than 300 patients, 85 percent of whom rely on Medicare coverage .

Hannon said the "devastating impact" of the Balanced Budget Act on health care, particularly home health care, is just starting to be felt across the Commonwealth.

"In Massachusetts, home health care is essential," Hannon noted in a guest column he wrote last week. "Without it, thousands of frail, ill and injured people might not get help or would have to leave their homes for much more expensive options, such as nursing homes. And yet, the federal government will spend $100 million less on home health care this year in Massachusetts by cutting visits to the homes of the sick and dying."

HCFA's new policies put home health care providers in an incredible Catch-22 bind. Unable to reduce their costs by reducing the level of care or "cherry picking" just the least expensive patients, home health care providers like the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association must find a way to absorb a tremendous amount of uncompensated care or go out of business.

"I have one client that costs as much as $50,000 a year to serve, but I may be required to provide that same level of services for only $8,000 or less," Doherty explains.

Laying off nurses, aides and therapists isn't an option – it would make it that much harder and more expensive to serve an unchanged patient count.

Lawsuits have been filed in at least three states and the District of Columbia seeking to block the funding caps, hearings in two are set for early June.

Attorneys in Oklahoma, Texas, Vermont and Washington, D.C. have filed federal class action lawsuits seeking to enjoin the HCFA from implementing the new payment schedule. Preliminary injunction hearings are scheduled for early June in Vermont and Texas.

Hannon said some skeptics think the federal government is trying to force people into nursing homes since Medicaid kicks in when all personal assets are depleted, and half of Medicaid is paid for by states. "One of the most devastating impacts is the increased likelihood that frail seniors living alone and people with chronic health conditions will be admitted to nursing homes."

HCFA itself concedes that more than 90 percent of all home health agencies will be reimbursed less than their costs. They have yet to explain how those agencies will survive the short-funding.

Care cuts run deep

driveway and back for exercise," he says. "I have to stop twice on the way up. And I can't talk and walk at the same time or I run out of breath."

Falling is an ever-present risk because Parkinson's disease affects both balance and gait.

"He fell in February and cracked his sternum," says his daughter. "I really have to hire someone to be here when I'm not home."

Wacker is philosophical about his own failing health.

"As long as you know your own capabilities, you get along pretty good. You have to accept the idea you can't do what you used to do. If you don't you go nuts and you end up in the hospital any way."

As Wacker's health inevitably deteriorates, his daughter promises to advocate for the services he needs. And as long as there is a Medicare certified home health care agency providing services in Scituate, he'll continue to get what he needs.

That's the kicker.

Home health agencies aren't run on volunteer power. Without a realistic reimbursement schedule to pay the nurses, therapists and home health aides for services delivered, those agencies say they cannot continue in business.

The U.S. Congressional delegation from Massachusetts hopes to derail the new system before it drives any more home health care agencies out of the business. Rep. James P. McGovern, D-Worcester, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy have filed companion bills in the House and Senate to address the problem.

SICK DAYS

The bills will delay the effective date of the caps until Oct. 1, 1998, to allow time for agencies to adjust to the system. Additionally, the bills change the base year for calculating benefit limits from 1994 to 1995.

"This change means that payments will more accurately reflect the type of home care that is currently delivered," explains Kennedy.

In testifying about his bill, McGovern has said that the one in 10 Medicare beneficiaries who use home health care services are "poorer, sicker, more often female, more likely to live alone, and have more mobility problems than the Medicare population generally. Approximately 25 percent of these 'frail elderly' in Massachusetts are over age 85."

Adolph Wacker shares his life story and medical history with Meg Doherty, executive director of the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association that provides his home health care services.

Adolph Wacker reminisces about the small house he built on the shores of his favorite pond before heart disease, Parkinson's disease, emphysema and diabetes ended his trout-fishing days.

Make your voice count

Let your voice and opinions be heard on the effort by Congress to balance the federal budget by cutting Medicare's home health care program. We encourage our political leaders to find measures to cut federal spending, but not at the hands of those who may need it most. We want them to exhibit some courage and make hard choices on what needs to be cut — those programs and initiatives that will have minimal impact our elderly, infirmed and those most in need.

Join us in our effort to raise awareness about the devastating impact some of these cuts will have on South Shore residents relying on home health care options. Call our Reader Response line at 1-781-837-4654 and express your views.

After you hear the tape-recorded message, simply leave your name and address, along with a brief message. We will be compiling all of the responses and stories in a package to send to our Congressmen and Senators. Again, the number is 1-781-837-4654.

Cohasset Health Board orders new CHL hearings land; and discharging methane gas in an underground pocket and creating a danger of an explosion.

McNabb was quite pleased with the health board's decision.

"This is a very good decision by the board," McNabb said. "Obviously, they put a lot of thought into their decision. And, they based their decision on their own thinking and not just my presentation."

CHL owner Paul Barry asserted that the town was trying to shut him down because residents disliked landfills.

"It's like we're the plague," Barry said. "Landfills are a necessary evil. When we had the sewer plant overflowing into basements and the harbor, did we ever hear one word about closing it down? Never. It's the same thing here. You have to have sewer treatment plants and you have to have landfills."

Barry said the extra fill in Area IV-B was placed there by accident, and the material on the slopes was placed there "by eyeball." He added that DEP inspected reports showing the extra material on the slopes, but never objected to the additional height.

CHL's attorney Anton Moehrke offered various arguments for rejecting site assignment hearings. He alleged that McNabb was guilty of a serious conflict of interest because he served the town as public official while also serving as a member of SAFE, which is a private group focused on shutting down CHL. He criticized McNabb for calling in the Army Corps of Engineers to perform groundwater tests downgrade from CHL. Moehrke also accused the health board of ignoring violations at the town landfill while pursuing CHL for every violation.

"This is a very good decision by the board. Obviously, they put a lot of thought into their decision. And, they based their decision on their own thinking and not just my presentation."

JOHN K. MCNABB JR., SAFE VICE-PRESIDENT

"You now have someone who is a member of a group that is sworn advocate of closing down the landfill using federal resources," Moehrke said. "Is he acting as a water commissioner or as a member of SAFE? As far as I can see, most of his waking hours are devoted to closing the landfill."

Moehrke added that he believed the health board's decision could be nullified because of McNabb's alleged conflict of interest. He also implored the health board to have an engineer examine SAFE's presentation to verify its accuracy.

"I have yet to see anything based on the facts that shows that the landfill poses a meaningful threat to the environment," Moehrke said. "Why not have the town's high-price consultants that you have been paying for years analyze this information and we'll provide a transcript of the hearing. After hearing their analysis, if you think this is an appropriate use of public resources based on a small group's request, then let's go to hearings."

CHL-engineer Raymond Quinn said there was no evidence that leachate was migrating underground from the landfill into groundwater. He said test wells at the landfill showed contaminants underground, but the next well, at 150-feet, showed no contamination except for chemicals which originated at the Mass. Highway building.

Health board member Stephen Bobo said Quinn's assertions were inaccurate.

"Are you saying that the leachate somehow stops at CHL's border?" he asked.

Ulmer also rejected Moehrke and Quinn's assertions. He said the record showed that the health board has worked with the conservation commission diligently to clean up problems at the town landfill. He also pointed out that the town landfill is closed and does not pose an ongoing threat to health, safety and the environment. He also told Quinn that new test wells should be placed closer to CHL's border than 150 feet.

"I don't think water pollution has to reach half-way to the well or a quarter-way for us to consider it a threat," Ulmer said. "I'm saying if you go out five feet from the border, you'll find contamination."

Bobo supported Ulmer's statements, pointing out that new technologies gave officials a better understanding of how landfills work. He said what was a good site assignment in 1976 was not necessarily a good site assignment in 1998.

"There is no good reason to put a landfill on a glacial drumlin when leachate will damage the groundwater in five years, 15 years or 50 years," Bobo said. "It's time to say we don't want it."

Residents also objected to the landfill's violations.

"I'm not John McNabb, but I feel the same as he does," said resident Bob O'Hare. "CHL through its representatives points its finger in every direction. These are serious allegations and as a citizen I ask the board of health to uphold other boards."

Ulmer said the health board was obligated to look out for the long-term impacts of CHL's site, which was not really appropriate for a landfill.

"My feeling is that the gas migrating off-site is the most serious threat," Ulmer said. "I feel we have inadequate test wells that are not in the right place, significant permit violations, and exceedances on the slopes."

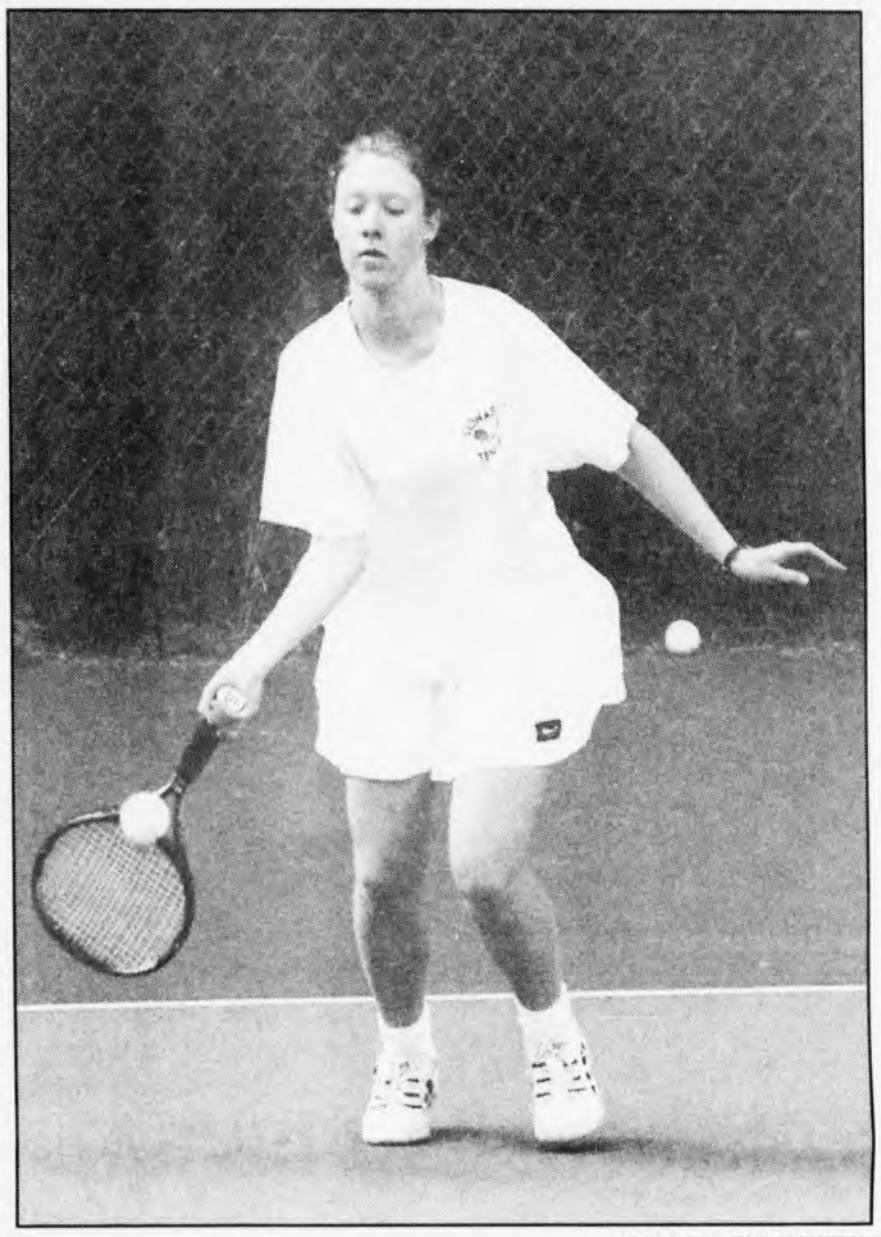
School chief pool narrows



The pool of candidates who want Stephen Hart's job has shrunk again. Wednesday, Richard Carlson, the superintendent of the Lunenburg school district, dropped out of the competition. He became the second educator among the original five finalists to end his bid to become Cohasset's next school superintendent. The school board now will have to choose from a field of only three candidates when they name Hart's successor later this month..

The fifth finalist, never named, dropped out before the finalists' names were announced May 21. According to James Hardy, the search consultant, he withdrew because he took a post with another school district. There was no opportunity to name another candidate because decision letters had already been sent out to the semi-finalists.

Carlson was expected to be in Cohasset June 15 for an interview with the school committee. His departure meant the last of the finalists' interviews was set for Wednesday night when Hull superintendent John D. Maclean, Jr. was scheduled. Along with Maclean, the other remaining candidates are Irene Sherry Kaplan, the present superintendent of the Whitman-Hanson Regional District, and Edward Malvey, the Griswold, Conn. school chief.

Hart is retiring in August.

CHS tennis falls in South semifinals

Every good thing must eventually come to an end

SPORTS WRAP UP

For the CHS girls' tennis squad that end came Wednesday to Dover-Sherborn in the semifinals for the Division 2 South title.

The previously undefeated Lady Skippers fell to the veteran invaders 3-2, getting wins from the undefeated first singles team of eighth graders KC Camacho and Caitlin Flint as well as second singles player Katie Brister.

Head coach Sarah Meehan can now sit back and watch her team grow from this tourney experience. The only senior on the team is tri-captain Sara MacDonald, with everyone else expected to be back for another season.

It was a very strong year for the Skippers both as a team and on the individual level.

Brister and Kate Stone were both named as singles to the South Shore League all-star squad while Flint and Camacho were selected in the doubles category.

As a team, the squad won the South Shore League regular season title and shared the annual sportsmanship trophy with Norwell.

Class of 1998 made their mark at Cohasset High

While trying to make their mark in the classroom as well as in the community, a number of members of the graduating Class of 1998 also represented Cohasset well on playing fields across the South Shore.

Leading the charge was Paul-Michael Quintin, a senior captain for the Skippers basketball team who became only the fourth player in Cohasset history to reach the 1,000 career point mark when he hit a shot from the top of the key against Rockland in a late-season encounter.

Quintin became the "go to" guy for Cohasset over the last two seasons, consistently getting points from inside and outside when his team needed them the most.

Also stepping out from the pack was Jaime Buick, who distinguished himself in the fall with the

Soccer officials irate over misinformation about not keeping score in games

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

Dean Conway understood there was a serious problem when he took his dog for a walk last week.

"Hey Dean," someone yelled to the Massachusetts Youth Soccer Association (MYSA) Director of Coaching. "Start keeping score in your games."

Everybody from the liberal editorial writers of the Boston Globe to conservative radio talk show host Rush Limbaugh has been all over state soccer officials for their so-called plan to eliminate keeping score in all youth soccer games.

However, Conway and other MYSA officials say there is no such plan and that the media has totally distorted MYSA's views on youth soccer over the last week.

"This thing has taken on a life of its own," Conway said on Monday night. "MYSA never suggested not to keep score in soccer games. We always have and always will keep score in every game. If you don't keep score, it isn't a game you're playing. And to my knowledge, nobody has ever proposed anything even close to this at any of our meetings. I don't know how all this misinformation got started but to me this is a total goof."

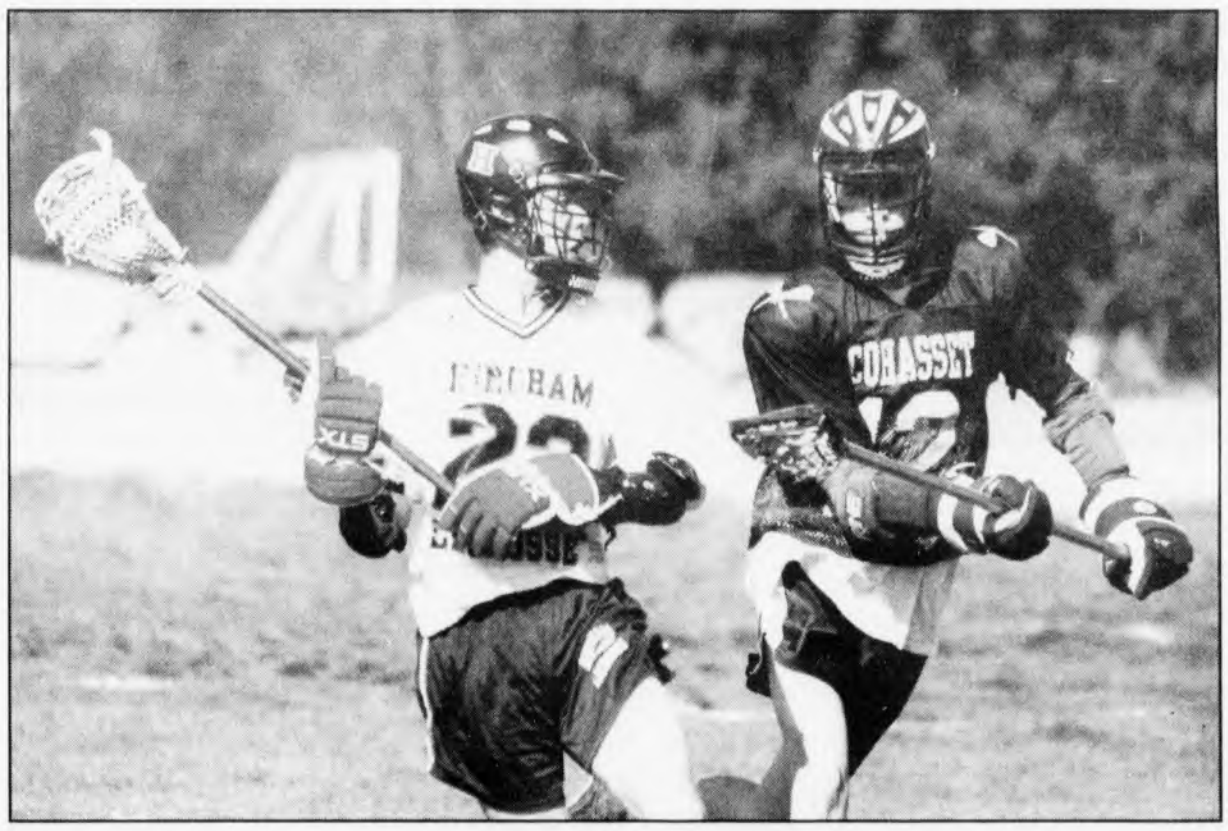
Conway pointed out that MYSA has a two year-old policy that prohibits first-place trophies from being handed out at any holiday or post-season tournament for all players age ten and under. Official game scores are kept, but there are no first-place trophies awarded to players at these "friendship" tournaments. This rule does not apply to regular season or town league games and tournaments for players age 10 and under.

There are no such MYSA restrictions for players in other age groups (Under 12 to Under 19) and none are planned in the near future, according to Conway.

"We always have and always will keep score in every game. If you don't keep score, it isn't a game you're playing. And to my knowledge, nobody has ever proposed anything even close to this at any of our meetings... And because of all this, we have been painted as some sort of politically correct group that wants to prevent a child from being crushed from losing. Some of the stuff that people have been saying is pretty hard to believe."

-MYSA DIRECTOR OF COACHING DEAN CONWAY

In fact, this month MYSA is holding its annual state championships at the Smith and Wesson Fields in Springfield. This weekend and next, the State Cup Championships will be held for Premier teams (U-12 to U-19.) And on the last weekend in June, the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions (MTOC) will be held for town-based teams (U-12 to U-19.)



"Because the players are so young and the focus is on developing soccer skills at the U-10 level, we feel it's best that if any trophies are given out at tournaments, then every player should get one," Conway said. "We don't think at age seven or eight individual teams or players should be singled out. We want the young players and coaches to focus solely on developing soccer skills. But that's only for tournaments and not regular season or town leagues. And that's the only regulation we have in place about that. But somehow it has been presented in newspaper articles and TV stories that we have forbidden teams from keeping score in any games and that we plan to implement this across the board to all age groups. That just isn't the case."

Conway did admit that some MYSA officials have informally discussed extending the no first-place trophies policy to tournaments for players in the U-12 group. But it has never been presented as a formal proposal for a vote by board members. And there are no plans to do so in the future.

"In theory, extending this rule to U-12 players sounds like something that would be good for soccer because there are too many people who just focus on winning and not on developing skills," he said. "But the reality is that change won't happen any time soon. This is only something that a few people talked about. It was only talk."

Conway said no major media outlets or newspapers have spoken to him or to any other MYSA officials to verify its policy regarding scoring or awarding championship trophies since the first stories ran last week.

"Discussion is a good thing in sports, politics, you name it," he said. "But this has been a major distraction because there has been a lot of misinformation put out there. You would think people would want to get their facts straight if they're going to come out with a story. And because of all this, we have been painted as some sort of politically correct group that wants to prevent a child from being crushed from losing. Some of the stuff that people have been saying is pretty hard to believe."

Ray Cabral, the MYSA Director of Player Development, cannot believe the media storm that is swirling around the organization.

"Nowhere did anyone from MYSA say we don't want to keep score in our games," he said. "That just isn't the case. And the idea of not giving out first place trophies for U-12 players was something we only talked about. It was a hypothetical situation. It was never proposed and I doubt it ever will be. Somehow everything got totally out of whack."

Cabral said youth soccer players and coaches should not worry anymore. The score will always be kept in all games and all players over age 12 will be able to compete for state championships on their youth teams.

"There is no plan to do away with the MTOC U-12 championship and there never was," he said. "It was a casual conversation. And there never was any plan to eliminate all scoring in soccer games. I have no idea where that came from. Players have to be able to deal with both winning and losing. That's part of athletics and part of life."

However, Cabral said this controversy about not keeping score in soccer games shows how some people don't understand what youth soccer is all about.

"Soccer is different from all other sports," he said. "The prime time for teaching skills and developing players is from age 6 to 12. And in most of the other countries in the world, the best coaches work with younger players and they don't start having competitive matches until the players reach age 12. But because there is such a competitive culture in America, too many people are obsessed with winning at all costs. So instead of developing players and teaching skills, coaches make winning the only priority. And that's not what youth sports is all about."

Two years ago MYSA eliminated the age 10 and under MTOC state championship bracket to try and have coaches and players return to the fundamentals of the game. The move has paid off big time, according to Cabral.

"We want a non-pressure environment for the younger players so they can learn the game and have fun," he said. "And we want people to understand that the best coach isn't the one who wins all the time but is the one who best teaches his players the fundamentals of the game. That has been our focus and eliminating the MTOC U-10 bracket was a step in the right direction. But that is the only step we've taken. All that other stuff just isn't happening."

Cohasset junior lacrosse clubs split with Sandwich

The Cohasset junior lacrosse program hosted Sandwich June 7, with both the Blue and White squads hosting teams from the cape town.

Cohasset Blue opened the day against an unbeaten Sandwich 2 team that quickly proved why it had not lost yet this year. Sandwich jumped out to a 5-1 halftime lead.

Cohasset tried to mount a comeback early in the third quarter behind goals by Mike Ernst and Paul Digan, but Sandwich came back to answer and then went on to put the game away 11-4 in the fourth quarter. Michael Devine scored Cohasset's other two goals and Digan added an assist.

Chris Simms made 12 saves in the net.

"We had our opportunities and actually controlled the game for much of the day," said Cohasset coach Chuck Jaffe. "But we just couldn't capitalize on our chances, and they seemed to make the most of theirs."

When the Blue squad had finished, Cohasset White put its 7-1 record on the line against a Sandwich 1 team whose only loss this year had been in an intra-town scrimmage.

It was a close game throughout, tied at 2 after one period, Cohasset leading 4-2 at the half. The score was 6-5 Cohasset to start the fourth period when Sandwich scored three goals in just more than two minutes to get an 8-6 lead. But Michael Rasmussen answered with his own fourth-quarter hat trick to tie the game, and Dwayne Morris scored his third goal of the game with just more than a minute remaining to complete the comeback and give Cohasset the win.

Rasmussen finished with five goals and one assist. Garrett Curran and Paul Cotter each scored once for Cohasset. Jonathan Litauer added an assist and Nick Murphy made 11 saves in the net, several down the stretch to deny Sandwich attempts to tie the game.

After Monday night games against Norwell and Hingham, Cohasset's two junior squads will join forces for the annual Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree in Acton-Boxboro. The clubs will play against teams from Sudbury and Beverly June 13, taking part in the nation's largest youth lacrosse event.

Learn to play baseball at camp

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for a week-long baseball camp for youngsters ages 5 through 12 at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

The South Shore Baseball Camp has been contracted again this year to provide baseball camp, which will be held for one week, beginning Monday, June 22, through Friday, June 26, at Miliken Field.

Two camps are available to youngsters as follows: Full-day, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., camp for ages 7 and over, and a half-day, 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. camp is available for 5- and 6-year-olds, (age 7 optional for either half or full-day camp).

The week-long camp costs $140 per child for the full-day, and $75 per child for the half-day program.

Participants should bring lunch, snacks and any drinks, other than water, they may want. Please bring your own glove, which should be marked with your name.

The show must go on for Pilgrim skaters

Skating Club celebrates 25 years on the ice

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Erin McGinn munched on steaming-hot clam chowder during a short break in Friday's four-hour dress rehearsal at Pilgrim Arena. The following day was to be a special one for the Hingham High senior.

McGinn would be representing the Skating Club of Hingham for the final time in the club's pair of anniversary shows, "Looking Back Over 25 Years." For the 18 year old, who will be attending Quinippiac College this fall as a nursing major, the day was going to be a bitter-sweet experience after competing for the club the last five years.

"I'll definitely miss all the skaters," said McGinn. "They've all become great friends. It's going to be emotional tomorrow. I'm looking forward to it, but it's going to be sad, too."

The dress rehearsal for the anniversary performance was to be the culmination of a month of preparation by 55 club members from all over the South Shore. Skaters ranging in age from 8 to 17 glided across the ice in their colorful outfits. The music was an array of tunes spanning several decades.

Behind the scenes, a group of dedicated volunteers put together the musical arrangements and worked out last-minute kinks.

Hanover's Gail MacDonald, the show's director for the second year in a row, fixed her serious gaze on the skaters from the function room above the ice. MacDonald was not unlike a Broadway director in the way she studied the skaters, making sure their figures were in synch with the music. Other volunteer coaches were down on the ice, giving subtle pointers to the colorfully dressed skaters as they moved effortlessly across the ice.

The music would play a big part in the overall theme of the shows and help determine how caught up the audience would get in the productions.

"It's music from past years," said club president Gary Perfetuo. "We try to take music from past shows we have done." Fittingly, McGinn would be one of the skaters taking center stage, performing to Madonna's hit song "Material Girl."

Perfetuo said the shows would give parents, relatives and the 200 or so spectators he expected for the event to see the kids display what they had learned over the course of the year and highlight their specific skills.

Perfetuo said the club believes it is important the girls have fun during their practices, competitions and shows. The work they put in, along with their upbeat attitudes toward the sport, goes a long way in the girls' improvement over time.

"I take pleasure in the fact they're having fun and enjoying themselves," he said. "We know it's an individual sport but there's a lot of comraderie, not just in the skating aspect, but other things as well."

Gabrell Perfitio is fitted for her ice dancing costume.

For 14-year-old Julie MacKay, the day was going to be particularly special. The Winsor School eighth-grader would be performing for her grandmother, Isabel MacKay, on what was her 75th birthday.

Julie's mother, Nancy, likes the club's philosophy and is especially impressed with the way the girls get along and the genuine friendships that have grown between many of the skaters as a result of the club.

"They work very hard to improve their skills and we want people to appreciate that," Nancy said.. "We're all very proud of them. It's a very supportive group."

Dressed in a silver glitter blouse and black and silver slacks, Julie had been practicing the ABBA number, along with other disco hits from the '70s, before the break. The personable Hingham resident was especially excited about the following day's performances.

"I look forward to it every year," she said. "It's really a lot of fun for all of us. There's no pressure at all. It does take a lot of practice to do these numbers."

Pilgrim Arena's owner Hoby Taylor has been a key supporter of the club, Perfetuo said, and has accommodated figure skating more than several other rinks.

"The Pilgrim Rink and the Taylors have been very good to us," Perfetuo said. "In many rinks it's just hockey, hockey, hockey. It's great to see the support we've received."

football team and each spring as a member of the lacrosse team. Lending him a hand on the lacrosse team were Adam Donovan, Janson Dupree, Derek Bugley, Pat Leahy, Bourke Corcoran, Tom Leahy and Eric Moore

Football co-captains Pat Hurley and Andy Hamilton also had strong seasons on the gridiron and on the basketball court.

Swimmer Greg Bilton was grabbing the gold wherever he saw it, winning Division 2 state titles in the 100-yard backstroke and the 50-yard freestyle events.

Soccer player Josh Flanagan also excelled in sports outside of the school, becoming one of the top ranked mountain bikers in New England in the Under-18 division.

Gridiron lineman John Kasamayer also did his thing for the lacrosse team while Brandon McDowell provided support on the football field.

Strong play from team captain Alia Afshar was one of the main reasons that the lacrosse team was able to make it to the state tournament this season. Joining her on the squad were fellow captain Katie Buckley as well as Kristen Reynolds, Sue Gill, Lauren Dooley and Lindy Holway.

Buckley and Dooley were named to the South Shore League all-star team while Reynolds also starred on the track and field squad.

Carolyn Pratt was the leader of a small but feisty gymnastics squad that claimed a share of the Pilgrim Conference title with Hanover this season.

While things didn't go all that well for the girls soccer team this season, Ali Kinchla and Hannah Bregan provided the senior leadership that kept the team together and having fun.

Kinchla was also leader on the lacrosse team this year.

Whitney Cook and Rosalind Muniz did the same for the Lady Skippers basketball team and Dooley and Kelly Tufts stood out on the softball team.

South Shore soccer camp

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 to 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's eighth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department; first floor, Town Hall, or call 383-4109. Brochures and registration forms are available at the recreation office.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both boys and girls during the week of Monday through Friday, Aug. 3 to 7, and Aug. 10 to 14.

Should a camper wish to attend both camps, this is now possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camps must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for the camp is $195 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore soccer camp represents topflight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players for the New England area.

Youth soccer camp registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP Soccer Camp for children ages 4 to 7 years old.

VIP Soccer Camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4-7. ABC soccer is especially designed for 4- and 5-year-olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 20, through July 24. The cost is $50 per week.

Also offered by VIP is a three-hour program, meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 20, through July 24 for 6- and 7-year-olds. The cost is $80 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the front field of Cohasset High School.

For brochures and registration forms, come to the Cohasset Recreation Department office, first floor, Town Hall.

Rec. dept. offers lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for adult tennis lessons for beginner and intermediate levels of instruction, by calling 383-4109.

Classes are scheduled to begin June 25, at 6 to 7 p.m. for beginners and 7 to 8 p.m. for intermediates.

Sessions are four weeks in duration, meeting one hour weekly and cost $35 for the four-week session.

Teaching will be Ms. Amanda Gontarz of the recreation department's tennis staff.

Jaffe lacrosse clinic for grades five and six

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Mr. Chuck Jaffe will direct, again this summer, an eight-week lacrosse clinic for youngsters in grades five and six.

Clinics are held Mondays at Miliken Field, from 6:30 to 8 p.m., beginning Monday, June 29, and continuing eight weeks through Aug. 17. The cost for the eight-week, full-equipment, contact clinic is $35 per participant.

Registration forms are currently available at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Space is limited. Mr. Chuck Jaffe, a Cohasset resident and former collegiate lacrosse player and league coach, volunteers his services for this unique lacrosse opportunity.

Rec. dept. summer playground options

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold registrations for the seven-week summer playground program ages 3-1/2 to 12 years, youth tennis ages 7 and over, and drama workshop, ages 5 and over during the week of June 15.

Registrations are held at Cohasset Town Hall Monday through Thursday, June 15 through 18, from 9 a.m. to noon, 1 to 3 p.m., and Thursday evening from 5 to 7.

The Cohasset Recreation also offers a variety of week-long sports camps for baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, roller hockey and mixed sports. Registrations for the sports camp programs are ongoing and camp brochures and registration forms are available currently at the recreation department office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or you may call the office at 383-4109 for more information.

Hoop summer camp registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will sponsor a Summer Basketball camp, under the direction of Ron Ford.

Based upon age, two camp sessions will be available this July. Boys and girls, ages 8 through 11, will have camp from Tuesday, July 7, through July 10, at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gymnasium.

The fee for the four-day camp is $120. The full week camp, for boys and girls ages 12 through 15, will be held Monday, July 13, through Friday, July 17, at the Sullivan Gymnasium. The fee for the five-day camp is $150.

Brochures and registration forms are available at the Cohasset Town Hall, Recreation Department office.

Summer Drama Workshop

Once again for the Summer of 1998, The Deveney Sisters will hold drama workshops for youngsters of all ages. Details regarding the 1998 productions will be forthcoming during early June and registrations will be held during the week of June 15. Please watch for further information via local news media

Band Concerts

During the past nine seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. Each June the Board of Directors of the South Shore Music Circus take under consideration the request of the Recreation Commission, for concert funding, hence, certainty of concerts is not absolute until mid-June, each season. The SSMC donation is matched by a grant form the American Federation of Musicians, N.Y.C.

Based upon continued SSMC funding, the schedule for the 1998 season is as follows:

Tuesday, July 14, 7:30 p.m., and Tuesday, Aug. 11, 7:30 p.m.

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore concert band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh. Concerts are held on the Cohasset Common, are free of charge and the public is cordially invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available.

Youth Tennis

Youth tennis begins Monday, June 29, and continues for seven weeks through Aug. 14. Youth tennis registrations will be held, starting Monday, June 15, and continue throughout that week, as follows: Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to noon, and again 1 to 3 p.m., and Thursday evening, from 5 to 7 p.m. The program is offered for children aged 7 through 18. It is designed on a Monday/Wednesday or Tuesday/Thursday schedule. The fee for the one seven-week session of instruction, two days a week, is $48. Five dollar discounts are available for additional children in a family.

Lessons for beginners, intermediate and advanced players are offered. Fridays are special clinic or tournament or rain make-up days. Rain day policy: If it rains before 9 a.m., all tennis classes will be canceled for that day.

Nelta Tournament

The Nelta Tournament will be held during July. More information will be forthcoming through the tennis classes. Registrations for this event will be done through the youth tennis classes. If interested, please register through the recreation department office the week of June 15 at the designated times and days listed above. Classes will begin Monday, June 29.

Adult Tennis

The Recreation Department will offer tennis classes for beginner and intermediate tennis players continuously throughout the summer on various evenings. The classes are one hour long and a session is four weeks in duration. New sessions will begin approximately every four weeks.

Beginner classes meet various evenings from 6 to 7 p.m., and the intermediate classes will meet from 7 to 8 p.m. Advanced (tournament level instruction) classes meet Thursday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m., and advanced beginners will meet from 7 to 8 p.m. Thursdays. Classes will be limited in size. Additional classes will be formed should demand dictate. All classes will meet at the Recreation Commission Tennis Courts at the top of Norfolk Road, next to Miliken Field.

To register, please call the Recreation Department office at 383-4109. The fee for the four-week program is $35 per person. Payable by check to the "Town of Cohasset." Each participant will need a racquet. Classes do not meet if weather is inclement, and should you be in doubt, due to weather conditions, please call the Recreation Office prior to class time.

Important Phone Numbers — Summer Programs

Recreation Department, Town Hall, 383-4109; Beach and RTF Stickers, Town Clerk's Office, 383-4100; Cohasset Swim Center, June to September, 383-9436; and Cohasset Sailing Club, inquiries at the club at Government Island.

Dog Obedience Classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department will continuously, throughout the summer, offer dog obedience classes, taught by Mrs. Laurie Cleveland. Classes will be held Tuesday evenings, on the Town Common, Cohasset.

For both the beginner class and the intermediate/advanced class, dog owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding 4". Absolutely no spike collars.

The beginner class will teach basic obedience and responsible ownership to novice pet owners. Helpful hints on ownership, voice directions, basic commands and exercises beneficial to those thinking about eventually showing their dog, will be included. The intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Recreation Department beginner class. For all classes the fee is $48 for the eight-week, one-hour-per-week program.

To register for the next available session, please call the Recreation office at 383-4109. A new session will begin approximately every eight weeks. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis.

Recreation Commission Year-round Services

The Recreation Department conducts children, youth and adult programs and events on a year-round basis. Special after-school recreation programs for children aged 4 through grade 6 are held in three seven-week sessions, (Fall-Winter-Spring). Information regarding recreation activities appears in all local news media, fliers home from school, school menus and on cable TV local listings. You may call the office daily at 383-4109 for information on all services.

Get ready for Festival on the Common 1998

The South Shore Art Center presents the 43rd annual Festival on the Common Father's Day Weekend, June 19 to 21. Held on the Cohasset Common, the festival includes exhibitions, demonstrations, children's tent, handcrafters' booths, food vendors and entertainment. Along with the Festival on the Common, the Congregational Church will hold its annual Strawberry Festival.

Throughout the weekend there will be artists' demonstrations and workshops on the grounds surrounding the juried exhibition of visual arts and photography, an open members' show and a young artists' show. The festival opens at 2 p.m. Friday with exhibitions and more than 100 juried craft artisans, a food court and entertainment. On Friday afternoon at 4 p.m. Daisy Nell and Stan Collinson with Andy Woolf will fill the air with their guitar, banjo and fiddle, playing songs for all ages. Simultaneously, the Silver Spoon Cafe will be offering a New England lobster dinner. Pre-orders are necessary; for tickets call 383-8700. At 6 p.m. that evening, the South Shore Art Center will host the opening reception for the New England Sculptors Association Exhibition in the Art Center's Bancroft Gallery.

On Saturday, the 20th, the festival opens at 10 a.m., and from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. will feature the first-ever Cohasset Common Fiddler's Gathering. The SSAC has invited the finest traditional fiddlers in New England to enliven the festivities, representing several favorite styles including Irish, French-Canadian, Yankee, Southern Mountain and Western Swing, plus a fiddler from India playing traditional ragas on a European-style violin. From 2 to 4 p.m. Saint Stephen's Church atop Bourne's Rock at the center of Cohasset Village will host an open house. View the 14th century baptismal font in which Abraham Lincoln's ancestors were baptized, historic stained glass windows, and wood carving from Shakespeare's Stratford-on-Avon. At 3 p.m. Saint Stephen's Church will offer a presentation by Christopher Gose entitled Byzantine Iconography: History and Methods. Later that evening, the First Parish Church will host a Gospel Concert with The New Temple Singers at 8 p.m.; call 383-1100 for tickets. On Sunday, the 21st, the festival will open at noon, and you can buy a piece of Cohasset's beloved wooden flagpole that was removed last year from the Common and replaced with a modern one. For a $10 donation, festival goers can own a souvenir "slice," already cut and sanded, that they may decorate with materials from the activity tent or they may commission a South Shore Art Center Gallery artist to paint on the slice a scene of the Common. Presented will be a Father's Day concert by Watson Reid and Americana, suitable for families with young children, followed by the popular South Shore Bay Band.

There will be free parking at the South Shore Music Circus and a trolley will be available to provide a shuttle service to the Common. The Festival on the Common is made possible by the support of Leah and Peter Roy of Cohasset, BankBoston, The Patriot Ledger, Sullivan Brothers Auto Mall and many additional sponsors. For more information and a full program, call the South Shore Art Center at 383-2787. Please mark your calendars now for the 43rd year of the oldest outdoor art fair in the country!

The strawberries are coming!

People all over Cohasset are busy preparing thousands of fresh strawberries that have just arrived for the delicious gourmet treat that is available at the Second Congregational Church Strawberry Festival. This annual event, held in conjunction with the South Shore Art Center Festival on the Common, is once again drawing people from all over New England. More than 2,000 strawberry shortcakes with real whipped cream and delicious biscuits will be served to everyone for only $3.50 at the tree-shaded patio of the church.

A country store, located in Bates Hall of the church, will be open to all Saturday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and will offer a wide assortment of handmade crafts, old-fashioned preserves and jams as well as homebaked cakes, pies and other desserts. For food staples such as hamburgers, hot dogs and soft drinks, a snack bar will be open on the Common. Proceeds will benefit a number of charities including DOVE, Mary Martha Learning Center, Wellspring and many others.

Be sure to visit and get your fill of strawberries during Friday, June 19, 2 to 7 p.m., Saturday, June 20, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Sunday, June 21, noon to 6 p.m.

June 20 open house at St. Stephen's Church

In conjunction with the Arts Festival on the Common, all are invited to St. Stephen's Church Saturday, June 20, for a church and tower tour from 2 to 3 p.m., followed by a presentation on Byzantine Iconography at 3 p.m. in Walton Rodgers Hall at the church.

Come visit this venerable church at the center of Cohasset Village at 16 Highland Ave. (atop Bourne's Rock) to see the 14h century baptismal font in which Abraham Lincoln's ancestors were baptized, historic stained glass windows, wood carving from Shakespeare's Stratford-on-Avon, and a bell tower with a carillon of 57 bells (the largest weighing six tons).

The presentation titled "Byzantine Iconography: History and Methods" by artist Christopher Gosey will trace the development of the icon from its pre-Christian roots in imperial Rome and Roman-occupied Egypt to the height of its development in Byzantium and Byzantium's spiritual successor, Russia. Actual icons from the speaker's studio at various stages of completion will be on hand to illustrate the icon-making process.

Refreshments will be provided — admission is free. The open house is sponsored by the Stewardship Committee of St. Stephen's Church. For information call (781) 383-1083.

Summer solstice celebration at World's End

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that its 15th annual Summer Solstice Celebration will be held on Sunday evening June 21, form 6 to 8 p.m. (if weather is questionable, please call the World's End Ranger Station at 781-749-8956 after 4 p.m.) So pack a picnic supper, load the entire family into the car and join many of your friends and neighbors atop Planter's Hill for a most entertaining evening.

Tractor-drawn hayrides will be offered from 6 to 8 p.m. The night's festivities will be highlighted by the musical entertainment of the Ecuadorian musical group Yarina which means "Remembrance." Yarina's members, who are descendants of the Incas, will perform a selection of colorful music on a pan pipe, wood flute, guitar, and drum. In addition, a captivating explanation of the planetary alignment that brings this wonderful solstice each summer will be provided. As always, soft drinks and popcorn will be available and cookies will be provided for desert.

An admission fee of $5 for members of the Trustees of Reservations and $7 for non-members will be charged to cover expenses. Children 16 years and under will be admitted free. Sorry, no dogs.

World's End, a peninsula of two glacial drumlins joined by a narrow beach of rough sand, divides Hingham bay and the Historic Weir River. For over a century, this 251-acre property has been admired for its dramatic topography and magnificent landscaping. Its winding, tree-lined roadways were designed by famed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted in 1890 as part of a proposal to develop World's End as a "planned community" of more than 150 homes. Thankfully, the proposal never came to pass and the land was farmed and maintained by its owners as a private park. In 1967, through an extraordinary public and private effort, World's End was saved from development and The Trustees was able to purchase the property and preserve it in perpetuity.

Today, World's End with its quiet walks and panoramic ocean views, offers visitors opportunities for a wide range of activities, such as jogging, horseback riding, cross-country skiing, nature study and photography. To reach World's End, follow Summer Street from the rotary at Hingham Harbor, 1/4 mile to the first set of traffic lights and turn left onto Martin's Lane. Follow Martin's Lane 1/4 mile to its end where the entrance to World's End is located.

For more information about the Summer Solstice Celebration, please call Mary Campbell at The Trustees Southeast Regional office. Telephone (781) 821-2977, extension 110.

Art Center hosts realtors' reception

The South Shore Art Center in Cohasset invited more than 300 real estate professionals from Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Norwell May 26 for wine and cheese, as well as a tour of the exhibits and studios. The Art Center, located in Cohasset Village, provides cultural and educational programming for all ages. The realtors learned about opportunities for adult and children's classes, gallery exhibitions, "Art to Go" school programs, lectures, tours, trips and rental space for parties.

Director Dillon Bustin explained the benefits of corporate membership and encouraged the realtors to bring prospective buyers to visit the Art Center. He invited everyone to the annual Art Festival on the Cohasset Common June 18 to 21. For more information, call (781) 383-2787.

Sailing Club annual opening social

The Cohasset Sailing Club will kick off the 1998 summer season Saturday evening, June 27, with a dance/social for adults from 8 p.m. to midnight at the club location. Club members, potential club members, friends of the sailing club and their guests are welcome. Entertainment will be provided by a live dance band "The Irresponsibles."

A $10 donation will be requested at the door to support the general operation of the club.

An hors d'oeuvre /desert table will be set for anyone willing to provide one of the above. So dress casual, B.Y.O.B., a desert or an hors d'oeuvre and most importantly your dancing shoes. Let's have some fun and kick off the summer of 1998.

Schoolhouse Rock Live! on stage

Hull Performing Arts is proud to announce Schoolhouse Rock Live! book by Scott Ferguson, George Keating and Kyle Hall; music and lyrics by Lynn Ahrens, Bob Dorough, Dave Frishberg, Kathy Mandry, George Newall and Tom Yohe. The show will be directed by Lindsay Clinton and the musical director is Kathy Clancy of Braintree.

The original television series was created by George Newall and Tom Yohe, based on an idea by David McCall. These TV "shorts" taught children about a variety of things, including the rules of grammar (Conjunction, Junction), the creation of a bill in our government (I'm Just a Bill), and the Constitution (We the People). The humor and charm of this show translates just as much to adults. Many of today's parents will remember singing along with these skits on Saturday mornings when they were kids.

The director, Lindsay Clinton, has appeared in many HPA productions including "Two by Two," and "The Importance of Being Earnest." "Tomfoolery," "A Thurber Carnival" and "The Fantasticks" are her favorite directing credits.

The show will be presented in two different venues: outdoors at Fort Revere from June 20-21 and indoors at the Anne Scully Senior Center from June 25-27. Fort Revere provides a unique opportunity for HPA members to perform in an outdoor arena.

Outdoor performances are June 20 and 21 at 2 p.m. at Fort Revere, Telegraph Hill, Hull. Indoor performances are June 25, 26 and 27 at 8 p.m., and June 27 at 2 p.m. at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave. in Hull. Ticket prices are $8, $9 and $10 for the indoor tickets and $5 for all outdoor performances. Call (781) 925-2406 for directions and other information.

Hull Performing Arts is a non-profit, tax-exempt community theatre.

Beachfest at Nantasket

From 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday, June 27, Wellspring Multiservice Center will sponsor a fun-filled Beachfest on Nantasket Beach in Hull. Kite-making and flying, a 10k beach-walk, face painting, a sand sculpture contest, kids' old fashioned brick treasure hunt, frozen yogurt, beverages, foul shooting contest and more. Buttons are $5 for adults and $10 for families. Meet at the Mary Jeanette Murray Pavilion. Call Wellspring at (781) 925-3211 for more information.

Button available after June 1 at the Children's Exchange and Cohasset Nobles.

Portrait painting workshop slated

The North River Art Society will present a workshop by Clement Micarelli entitled "Painting a Portrait with a Mental Attitude" on June 13 and 14 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. An evening reception will be held June 12 at 7 p.m. The fee for the workshop is $150 for non-members and $140 for members.

The workshop is designed for those interested in advancing their portrait painting. Micarelli will cover thinking about a portrait in an intelligent way. Topics covered will be composition (placement, design, etc.), purposeful editing (focus on the viewer), painting a portrait through the logical steps. Demonstrations and one on one attention will be given. The workshop will increase your drawing and painting abilities and the momentum will continue to inspire you to new understanding.

Library director ends Cohasset chapter

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Richard Hayes is still a messenger promoting the "way to make people happy." He will retire July 1 after logging 29 years as the director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library leaving a career that was not his first choice. The talents gleaned from that first career training—in the ministry— might be one reason why he managed to convince the public a library could be anything a community wanted it to be.

"I started out to be a minister," he said but then found "another way to spread the word" through books. In an interview this week to mark the end of his work as the library's tenth director, it was clear Hayes is still preaching, and preaching passionately, the public library's unique role in fostering a good society. Seated in the cubbyhole loft that serves as his office, with birds chirping in competition, he explained why a free place to read is so important.

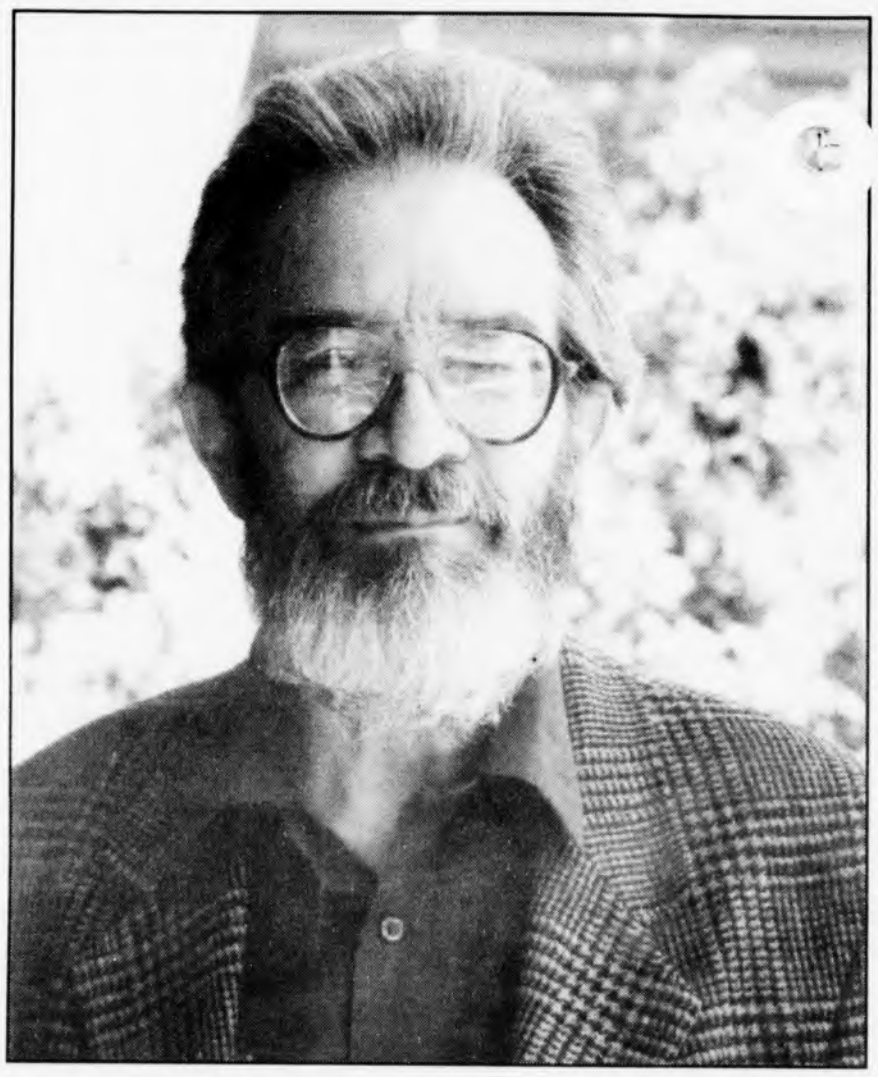
"When people get into the habit of reading, they can get inoculated against the worst characteristics of an era and infected by the most powerful and creative ideas," he said. In his opinion, people find happiness when they learn to enjoy the arts and the "life of the mind." But ultimately, the choice to learn everything there is to know about the world is an ethical decision. People who honor ideas can do great things.

For illustration, Hayes turned to the Adams family of Massachusetts. He had been reading about John Quincy Adams' fight against the slave trade. Adams waged the battle after he was president and remains "one of our overlooked but great Americans." The family's contributions to the nation might be greater than Thomas Jefferson's accomplishments, he said, even though Jefferson built a great library. Yet Jefferson remains the epitome of an ideal citizen because he wanted to learn everything. Instead of "just trudging along," he was interested in everything around him.

"When people get into the habit of reading, they can get inoculated against the worst characteristics of an era and infected by the most powerful and creative ideas."

Richard Hayes,
RETIRING DIRECTOR OF THE PAUL PRATT MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Hayes said he enjoyed working in Cohasset just because people did believe in tolerance and individual freedom. A test came up when he purchased several copies of Salman Rushdie's controversial novel "The Satanic Verses." He drew fire from people who believed the book insulted Islam, but Hayes defended the author's right to express his ideas.



"You can criticize the book," he said firmly. "But you can't ban the book. You can't blow up bookstores. And you can't kill authors."

Eventually, he persuaded his critics the book belonged on the library's shelves. Hayes said the challenge for a library director is to find books the community may not realize it needs and wants as well as to buy the titles people know they want. With limited funds, he has had to be selective. In a single year, Cohasset will buy less than three percent of all the books published in the United States in English. Still, he believes it is important to introduce the community to new and different ideas. In that mission, he has had the support of the library trustees.

As Patience Towle put it, "Dick is beyond bright." She called Hayes a "heavy-duty thinker" who guided the trustees in their policy decisions. Support for the changes he made also came in contributions. The endowment grew from $20,000 to three-quarters of a million while he was in charge.

Hayes will be replaced by Janet Husband who is coming to Cohasset from the Rockland Public Library. He wants to step down now as the trustees are searching for a new building, and he hopes they will find new space in the Osgood School. It would be appropriate because it was Joseph Osgood who started the public library in Cohasset, he said. The Paul Pratt building is 95 years old now.

"That's a good life for a building in this remarkable century," he said. "It's time to move on."

Cohasset graduates support one another in time of grief

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

As the Cohasset High School Class of 1998 marched into the Big Top at the Music Circus Saturday to the strains of Pomp and Circumstance, the standing ovation from family and friends was louder and longer than in past graduations.

Foremost in everyone's thoughts was Bourke L. Cocoran, 18, a fun-loving popular student who was killed just four days before in a car accident on King Street only 100 yards from his home.

But filling the hearts of all was a deepening pride in the young men and women who supported one another during this time, bringing a new definition to the meaning of friendship.

"I've always known you were special," said Eileen Rohrer, who was presented with the Golden Apple Award as the class' favorite teacher. "But in the past week you've conducted yourselves with love, support, dignity and grace. I love you all. I've been honored to be your teacher and your friend."

Rohrer's comments were echoed by Principal Curtis Collins, who said he'd received dozens of calls and notes from other school administrators across the state.

"It's fair to say that very few students ever had to sustain what our young men and women sustained this week," Collins said. "...Yes, we've all had terrible things happen but not at this time."

The timing of the fatal accident drew the attention of several television stations and Boston newspapers which — with microphones and whirring TV cameras — descended on the crash scene, high school and police station.

As a result, the principal asked Police Chief Brian Noonan for assistance in keeping television cameras off the grounds of the Music Circus during graduation.

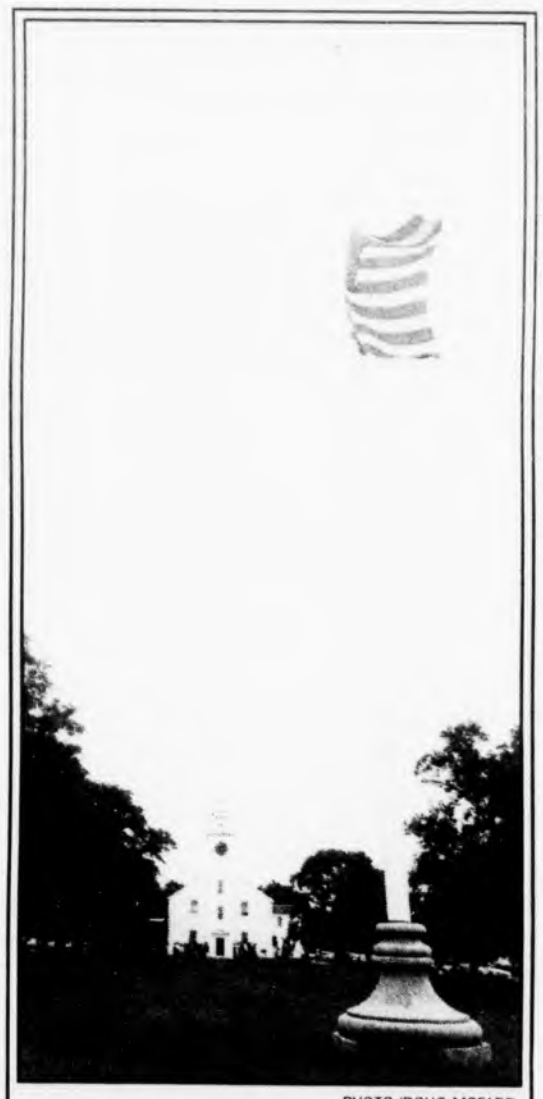
State to ante up $165K for village

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT



The town is expecting to receive some immediate help from the state with plans to revitalize Cohasset Village.

Dean Rizzo, chairman of the Village Task Force, said he expects the Massachusetts Highway Department to approve a $165,000 grant later this week to construct a new sidewalk and enhanced walkway in front of St. Stephen's Church. The Massachusetts Area Planning Council (MAPC) recommended earlier this week that Cohasset receive the $165,000 grant, through Mass. Highway funds.

Town leaders have been searching for ways to revitalize the ailing business community in Cohasset Village. Now, it finally looks as if some of those efforts are beginning to pay off. If Mass. Highway approves the grant, it will be a great win for the town, Rizzo said.

"This is great for the town and could boost

'Strong advocate' tapped as school chief

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Edward Malvey has accepted the job as the new schools superintendent. He will follow Stephen Hart who retires in August after logging nine years as the head of the Cohasset district.

Malvey, the head of the Griswold, Conn. school system, won the unanimous support of the school committee. The decision Monday night after a final interview with Hull superintendent John MacLean, Jr. came down to a choice between the two men. School board chairman Rick Shea said Malvey's "breadth of experience" convinced the committee he was the better choice. Though the board did not have their minds made up before they interviewed MacLean Monday night, the Hull superintendent had to "change people's minds" to overcome the advantage Malvey had built up.

Three other finalists withdrew from the search before the school committee finished interviewing all the candidates. Irene Sherry Kaplan, the Whitman-Hanson Regional school superintendent, accepted an offer to continue in her current post. Richard Carlson, head of the Lunenburg school system, dropped out of the competition June 9. A fifth finalist was never named but reportedly withdrew to accept another job.

But Shea was happy overall with the search for the new superintendent. He said Malvey is the right man for the job.

"He had all the intangibles," said Shea who predicted Malvey, 50, will be a "strong advocate for the schools" as well as a professional

Committee termination policy

Selectmen set a policy for removing appointed committee members this week. They said if a committee member misses four consecutive meetings without an excuse, the committee chairman can send a recommendation to selectmen who can remove him or her.

School grounds use clarification

Selectman Diane Sullivan asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to find out what the policy is for using school grounds. She said a resident told her she and her child were "scooted off" the school playground because school was in session.

Sankey Road pavement complaints

Residents of Sankey Road wrote to selectmen complaining about the condition of the pavement.

"I would like someone to come down and look at the street," wrote Arlene Orr, 8 Sankey Rd. She said the street is in one of the poorest shapes of any in town. DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield agreed the street is in poor condition, but asked the residents to be patient.

"It would not be fiscally responsible to resurface Sankey Road at this time only to have it dug up in a year's time," he said.

Border/Summer streets signs

John F. Hartshorne, 115 Border St., wrote to the traffic committee suggesting improved signs for the intersection of Border and Summer streets.

"The rights of way at this peculiar intersection are unclear," he said. "With the result that it is frequently a 'game of chicken' when two cars approach the intersection at or near the same time.

"The only guide is a yellow sign on Summer Street that says, unhelpfully, 'Children' (The sign has been there for years; there are no children residing at the intersection that I know of)."

Hartshorne suggested that since Border Street is clearly the only through street, a "Yield" sign be installed in place of the "Children" sign on Summer Street. The traffic study committee meets at 7:30 p.m. tonight (June 18) at town hall.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and will be held on alternate Tuesdays starting July 14.

The next selectmen's meeting is Monday, June 29.

Possible sewer meeting slated

Town Manager Mark Haddad has tentatively slated a joint meeting between selectmen, the health board and sewer commission for 7:30 p.m., June 25 at the town hall auditorium to discuss sewer issues.

Selectmen requested he set the meeting up at their meeting Monday after several residents aired concerns over the project.

However, the sewer commission has declined the invitation to appear so Haddad was not sure about the status of the meeting by press time.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said the issues were discussed at the sewer forum two weeks ago. He said another meeting is pointless at this time until the bids go out and the real cost of connecting homes to the sewer main can be determined. Until then, it is impossible to know if it's better for the homeowner to contract privately or to have the town contract out for the work, he said.

History committee resignation

Noel Ripley, 179 S. Main St., has stepped down from the Committee on Town History, which now has 11 members. Selectmen will send Ripley a thank-you letter for his service.

Paying the price for mismanagement

Is Mass. bearing burden of other states' waste?

Second of two parts

By Alison Cohen
STAFF REPORTER

According to many home health care providers and advocates, Medicare officials created a classic example of the law of unintended consequences when they embarked on their campaign to root out fraud, waste and overutilization in the home health care system.

The federal government decided large increases in home health care were caused by waste and fraud following a two-year investigation, known as Operation Restore Trust. That study focused on the five states that account for 40 percent of Medicare payments: California, New York, Florida, Texas and Illinois.

The subsequent report by the Office of the Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services said that one-fourth of home health agencies in those states received nearly half the Medicare payments for home health care. The report placed the blame on for-profit, closely held corporations where owners engaged in a web of interlocking companies that referred patients among themselves. Texas was cited as the biggest offender.

A similar study conducted in Massachusetts and Connecticut in 1997 uncovered no such pattern of fraud.

According to Julie Deschenes, legislative and public affairs coordinator for the Home & Health Care Association of Massachusetts, "No fraud was uncovered in the 20 Massachusetts agencies that were audited."

Deschenes said the worst that federal auditors could find were examples of technical billing errors, mostly stemming from failure of an attending physician to update medical records to reflect the need for the higher level of services patients were receiving and for which Medicare had been billed.

Rather than conducting audits to identify and penalize agencies guilty of intentional fraud or overutilization, Congress believed the solution to spiraling costs nationwide and wildly disparate costs among the states should be a standardized, flat rate according to diagnosis. This system, known as the "prospective payment system," is similar to the system Medicare uses in paying for hospital care.

When the federal Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) said it couldn't develop the complex formula necessary to reward efficiency by providers as quickly as Congress wanted, the interim payment system based on per patient caps was set in motion. This payment plan — set to run through Oct. 1, 1999 — basically freezes spending at 1993-94 levels, before Operation Restore Trust began.

The projected caps fall hardest on frugal, non-profit agencies and rewards those that spent lavishly at taxpayers' expense. Home health care agencies in Massachusetts consistently deliver care cheaper than the national average both in terms of Medicare's cost per visit and per patient. Relying on data provided by HCFA itself, The Wall Street Journal reported earlier this year that Massachusetts' home health care providers served 119,000 patients in 1995 at an average cost of $50 per visit, which was 19 percent below the national average of $62. The average annual cost per patient worked out to $4,730, or less than six percent above the national average of $4,473.

Across New England, the regional cost per visit undercut the national average by 15 percent and the annual average cost per patient was only $4,400.

Donna (who didn't want her last name used) has been a home health care worker for more than 20 years and says she can't understand with those kind of figures why Massachusetts people have to suffer. She says she's outraged by what's happening.

"We're the ones on the front lines and we're the ones who have to deal with the patients," she said. "Do you know what it's like when you have to tell them this is you're last day with them. Some of these people have been my clients for a long time."

Donna spoke of a 50-year-old patient she has been assisting. The man, a father of two young children, is primarily bed-ridden, he has to be fed and has come to rely on home health care workers to maintain some semblance of a normal life.

"I was overcome on my last day with him," she said. "I felt awful. It was so hard to tell him it would be my last day helping him. You feel so much guilt. What am I supposed to say, 'gee, good luck?' How could this be happening?"

If there is fraud and over-spending, Donna says she is all for fixing it. But if Massachusetts and several other states have been spending reasonably, she can't see why others can't pay the price.

HCFA identified the big spenders among the states as Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas, Tennessee, Utah and Mississippi. On average, home health care providers in these states spent $5,488 per patient in 1995, or almost 23 percent more than the national average. The biggest offender was Louisiana with an average cost per patient of $7,867, almost 76 percent more than the national average.

Officials at the Texas Association of Home Care have justified their higher costs, saying they have a high rate of poor elderly who have never had proper health care.

Costs are driven up by the increasing number of Americans considered "frail" or the "old old" — those aged 85 or older. Additionally, medical technology has improved survival rates for individuals who survive head and spinal chord injuries and degenerative diseases such as Alzheimer's, Multiple Sclerosis, heart failure and severe diabetes.

The resulting "per beneficiary limit" guarantees, in HCFA's own words, that 90 percent of all home health agencies will be reimbursed at a rate below the cost of delivering services. Providers say it will put them on the road to financial ruin. How quickly they arrive at that destination depends on the number of high-cost patients an agency serves. These are the patients with degenerative, progressive diseases such as Multiple Sclerosis, Muscular Dystrophy, Parkinson's Disease, Alzheimer's Disease, advanced diabetes and other conditions that require intensive levels of care.

Apparently loathe to slash services to America's most vulnerable citizens, the frail elderly and persons with disabilities, Congress and HCFA announced to recipients of home health services and their advocates that no patient was to be denied services, terminated from care or have the level of care reduced unless medically justified. That puts home health care providers in a Catch-22 bind: they cannot reduce costs through reductions in services or cutbacks in direct care staff. Already several home health providers have chosen to abandon ship rather than risk bankruptcy.

Cynics might find this governmental "solution" to spiraling costs reminiscent of the village pacification campaign of the Vietnam War years. That official "solution" led to an American officer explaining, "It became necessary to destroy the town in order to save it."

According to Deschenes, home health care is being asked "to assume an unfair proportion of Medicare cuts." While home health care consumes only 9 percent of total Medicare expenditures, it is targeted to assume 14 percent of the total five-year cut and close to 18 percent of the provider cuts enacted in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. A recent HCFA forecast has increased the home health "savings" to $20 million, or 25 percent more than the original estimate by the Congressional Budget Office at the same time that the population of older Americans continues to grow.

Home health care providers and people who receive the care aren't buying this theory that no one will lost benefits. It just doesn't add up, they say.

Community Newspaper Company's Reader Response line was flooded with calls last week regarding the potential cuts in home care. More than half the calls came from people who were losing some form of care, or family members of those who were expected to lose their care.

A Marshfield resident told the story of her grandmother who has already been denied additional care. Her grandmother has been cut back to one visit per day from a home health aide and now the family is forced to provide care that was once handled by professionals. It is now up to grandchildren to come at night and put their grandmother to bed, change her and put her in diapers.

"It is devastating to her," the woman said in her call. "She cries every night when she sees us coming. She's so humiliated her grandchildren have to do this. It's a disgrace to see what these poor old people have to go through. These people have worked all their lives and this is what it has come down to. It's just ridiculous."

Experts say saving money in home health care may even be counter-productive. If home health services dry up, patients will be forced into more expensive nursing home placements or extended hospital stays. The pocket may change, but taxpayers will still be paying the bill.

"I won't be able to care for my husband if we can't maintain the current level of care. That would be devastating to us, both financially and emotionally. We have been together for 55 years. I can't bear the thought of being separated like that. We are getting along fine at home right now, but that could all change. Please don't let it."

— WEYMOUTH RESIDENT

While home health care isn't cheap, it certainly provides a cost-savings when compared to a year's stay in a nursing home which Deschenes estimates at $60,000 per year. More importantly, it allows older American and disabled citizens to remain linked to their families and their communities.

The importance of that connection to home, family and community can't be quantified, but it is of immeasurable value to all of us in determining our quality of life. That message came through loud and clear in the messages on the Reader Response line during the past week.

A number of callers said they feared they might be forced to put their mother, father or elderly relative in a nursing home. And they held out little hope for their "golden years," as oen caller put it.

"How can this be?" questioned a Weymouth resident. "I won't be able to care for my husband if we can't maintain the current level of care. That would be devastating to us, both financially and emotionally. We have been together for 55 years. I can't bear the thought of being separated like that. We are getting along fine at home right now, but that could all change. Please don't let it."

Edward J. Flynn, executive director of South Shore Elder Services, Inc., says if the current policy remains unchanged, its primary victims will be the nation's elders. In a recent newsletter, Flynn urged Congress and HCFA to reconsider the cuts and clarify eligibility criteria.

State to ante up $165K for village sidewalk

our whole effort," Rizzo said. "If approved, it will also show the town that it made a good investment by putting up $10,000 to try and acquire the grant."

The MAPC grant is just one of many efforts by local committees to get funding for Village revitalization projects. Rizzo is also chairman of the Village Revitalization Committee. He briefed selectmen on Tuesday night about the two committee's latest efforts to find funding and ideas to revitalize Cohasset Village.

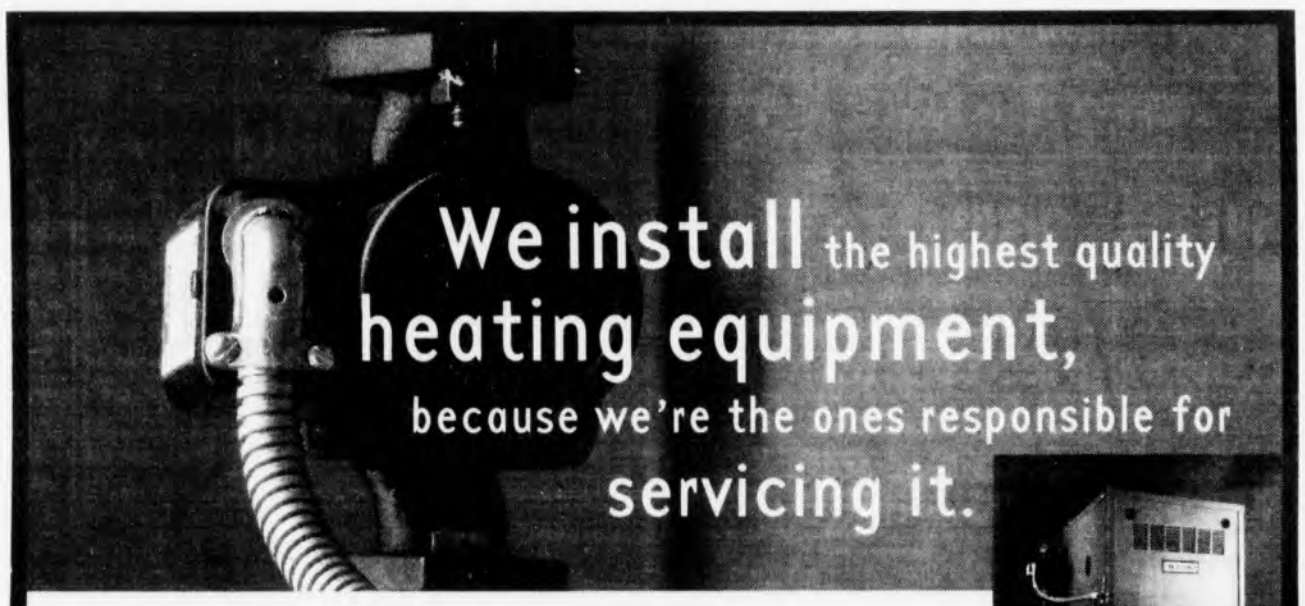
The $165,000 grant would be used to reconstruct the sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's from Robert E. Jason Road and South Main Street at the bus stop to the corner of Elm Street and South Main at the antique store. The town began applying for the grant last year. If the town gets the final approval from the state, the town would develop an RFP over the winter, with construction beginning sometime in the middle of 1999, Rizzo said.

Two grants were submitted by the town last week for the Village. The town applied for a Municipal Incentive Grant that would help fund a master plan to revitalize the Village. Rizzo said he hopes the town will be able to draw up a scope of work over the summer to present a master plan proposal to town meeting in October. The town will know by July 15 if it has made the first cut for the grant. If so, then a more detailed application must be submitted by August 15.

"The cost of the master plan will depend on the scope of the project and how detailed the plan is," Rizzo said. "The grant could help offset the cost of the plan."

But the most exciting grant proposal would seek money to fund ways to connect business districts in Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham and Hull. The $60,000 regional municipal planning grant would be used to develop a linkage project improving transportation, signage, and marketing among the four communities' business districts. The proposal could include trolleys or buses to take people among the four business districts, and signs in each business district pointing the way to the other three communities.

"We would hope to put signs in each business district with a route system that people could follow to the other communities."



DEAN RIZZO, CHAIRMAN OF THE VILLAGE TASK FORCE.

"We would hope to put signs in each business district with a route system that people could follow to the other communities," Rizzo said. "If we had signs that said 'Scituate: this way' and similar signs in Scituate, visitors could find their way around easily. We need linkage options specifically between these four communities. It would also allow us to explore ways to take advantage of our harbors and related opportunities. There are many thematic commonalties, like the harbors, that could be explored."

Using a $5,000 state Department of Environmental Management Coastal Access Small Grant, the town has hired architect Jim Shipsky to study the all-important problem of how to connect Cohasset Village with Cohasset harbor. Shipsky has offered some innovative ideas, including a Cohasset Harbor Promenade which would include pedestrian walkways, bike paths, benches, improved lighting and landscaping. He has also recommended the reconstruction of historic wharves, full-size displays of Cohasset's history as a center for clipper-ship construction and ideas about businesses in the harbor.

Shipsky will also address the scope of work requested by the town and study ways to direct people from Route 3A to Route 228 with better signage, parking issues, and pedestrian access.

Rizzo said it is also important for residents to offer their ideas and suggestions to improve the Village. The future of Cohasset Village has never been brighter, Rizzo said and he wants to make sure that every idea is considered. Suggestions can be sent to the Village Revitalization Committee through the Town Manager's office at town hall.

Court date slated for driver

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Police said William "Leigh" Atherton, 18,of Clay Spring Road has been issued a summons to appear in Quincy District Court on June 26, on charges following a fatal car crash last week.

Due to the seriousness of the accident, the Registry of Motor Vehicles revoked Atherton's license on June 11, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. He license was revoked indefinitely, Noonan said.

Atherton, who graduated from Cohasset High School Saturday, was the driver in a fatal accident on King Street shortly after 11 p.m., June 9, that claimed the life of his classmate, Bourke L. Cocoran, also 18. Police charged Atherton with motor vehicle homicide by reckless operation, operating to endanger, failure to stay within marked lanes and speeding.

Police said alcohol was not a factor in the accident.

Noonan explained the court appearance is a "show cause" hearing to determine if Atherton will be arraigned on the charges which include motor vehicle homicide, a misdemeanor punishable with a prison term of up to 2-1/2 years.

Noonan said the police and Norfolk County District Attorney's office will vigorously pursue this case because of the magnitude of the accident.

"We will pursue it like any similar type that had the outcome this one had," he said.

Police said Atherton's car, a 1995 Nissan 200 SX, was traveling in excess of 70 mph. The speed limit on the road is 30 mph.

In his yearbook entry, Atherton wrote he dislikes "speed traps" and is noted for "driving fast."

According to records obtained from the Registry of Motor Vehicles — in the past 18 months — Atherton had a total of three speeding tickets (two in Cohasset and one in Hingham), one written warning for speeding and was involved in a "surchargeable" single-car accident where he skidded off Jerusalem Road into a ditch last December.

In August of 1997, Atherton's license was suspended for having three tickets within a year. His license was reinstated in October.

On June 7, just two days before the fatal accident, police issued Atherton a written warning for going 48 mph in a 30 mph zone on Sohier Street.

Free saltwater sportfishing guide

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray offers the 1998 edition of the Saltwater Sport Fishing Guide.

In past years, as many as 70 different species of fish have been identified in the state's regional catch. The guide offers color pictures and detailed descriptions of many types of these fish. In addition, the guide provides basic information about the Commonwealth's recreational fishing opportunities, and includes a map of Massachusetts coastal waters, and listings for bait and tackle shops, party and charter boats, and this year's fishing contests.

For a free copy, call Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray at (617) 722-2400.

'Strong advocate' tapped as new school chief who will inspire confidence from town officials, teachers and parents.

Malvey salary in Cohasset and his first day on the job are still to be negotiated. He is earning $96,000 a year, starting July 1 in Griswold. In an interview Wednesday afternoon, he confirmed his acceptance is contingent on the contract talks. But Malvey did not foresee any problems striking a deal. (Hart currently makes about $94,000)

"I truly believe I will work well with this school board and this community," he said. Malvey also said he wants people to know he will be an advocate for children, for parents and for the schools.

"My whole career has been based on making improvements in public education," he said explaining he wanted to come to Cohasset because he found an atmosphere of support and excitement for positive changes here.

Malvey, who goes by the name "Ted," was an assistant schools superintendent in Mansfield from 1989 to 1992 before leaving to take the job in Griswold. In a telephone interview earlier, he said he always planned to come back to Massachusetts but was drawn to the Connecticut job because the school district had recently constructed several brand new buildings. He saw an opportunity to build on the new school theme with innovations in education.

Experience with school construction also weighed in his favor. He had the best experience of all the finalists in school building management, and his expertise ranged from fund raising to actual project management. Because issues about the age and condition of school buildings in Cohasset are expected to take up the school board's attention, Malvey's understanding of building construction turned out to be a big plus in his favor.

Malvey was graduated from Boston State College in 1970 (now UMass Boston). He also holds a master's degree in education from Northeastern University and a doctorate in education from George Washington. He spent the first 18 years of his career as a classroom teacher and assistant principal. He then logged 10 years as an assistant superintendent and finally a superintendent.

Griswold is a rural community located near New London and Groton and about 47 miles away from Hartford. Its main industry is dairy farming, though the town of 10,000 residents is changing and redefining itself as a suburban bedroom community. Over half the population is under 50. About the same percentage of youngsters attend the public schools in Griswold (93.5 percent) and in Cohasset (92 percent) according to school profiles published by the state education departments. B[illegible] the Cohasset district seemed to spend less money on education and still do better academically. For instance, Cohasset sent substantially more youngsters on to higher education (61.6 percent in Griswold against almost 100 percent in Cohasset). Moreover, only 37 percent of Griswold public high graduates went on to four-year colleges.

Cohasset students also outpaced Griswold students on the scholastic aptitude tests. Only 60 percent of the Griswold Class of 1996, the most recent class for which numbers were provided, took the college board exams. In comparison, 100 percent of the Cohasset Class of 1997 took the SAT. (The 1996 figures were not listed.) On average Cohasset students scored 520 on the Math aptitude test and 527 on the Verbal test, while Griswold seniors averaged only 481 on the Math section and 483 on the Verbal.

Ironically, Cohasset also spent far less money on education. Per pupil expenditures in Griswold topped $8,500 for the 1994-95 school year. Cohasset's per pupil expenditure was roughly $3,000 less. About 1,200 students went to public schools in Cohasset this year. The Griswold district was almost twice as big this year.

Maritime Museum open for the season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum at Elm Street, Cohasset Center, is open for its summer season. The museum is open each afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., except Mondays, from then through September. Admission is free, and donations are accepted.

The Maritime Museum, itself once a ship chandlery for Samuel Bates' fishing fleet, houses an extensive group of collections devoted to Cohasset's own maritime history. The town's major industries for nearly two centuries, from about 1700 to the 1890s, were fishing and shipbuilding. Peak years for the mackerel fishery in Cohasset were reached by 1850, when more than 50 large family-owned two-masted schooners called this their home port. A number of those schooners were built in shipyards at "Ship Cove," today known as Cohasset Harbor. The Maritime Museum illustrates that era of sailing vessels with exhibits of ship models, 19th century fishing gear, navigational instruments, shipwrights' tools, charts and pictures. Additionally, the story of shipwrecks and lifesaving is shown, and the history of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse is illustrated.

The museum also contains, on its second floor, a group of collections of more general historical nature; from Native American stone tools to early school desks to cordwainer's equipment and housewright's tools, mostly from early Cohasset.

Be sure to plan a visit to the Maritime Museum this summer to see a unique view of this early New England coastal village. The Historical Society's telephone number is (781) 383-1434.

$1K grant to help PALS program

Norfolk County Sheriff Jack Flood was on hand at the police station Friday to present a $1,000 grant to the police department. It was part of a county-wide effort to give local drug and alcohol abuse education programs a financial boost.

The money will go to Cohasset's PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools) program. About five years ago, police and the local school department worked together to tailor PALS to Cohasset setting it apart from the popular DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) program that follows a standard curriculum across the country.

"We're very supportive of these programs," Flood said.

Flood noted that 80-85 percent of those incarcerated in the Dedham House of Correction are there due to the abuse of drugs and/or alcohol.

Flood said it's never too young to start educating schoolchildren about the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

"With the average age of an inmate at 25 — the decision making at age 14 or 15 is going to have immediate ramifications on youngsters' lives," Flood said.

"I truly believe if we can stop the addiction, we can stop the crime," he said. "That's why I'm committed to continuing to assist Norfolk County police departments in their efforts to stop substance abuse."

Every police department in Norfolk County will receive a $1,000 grant this month from the sheriff's office to fund DARE or DARE-like education programs in the public schools.

The sheriff's office has awarded the grants for more than a decade.

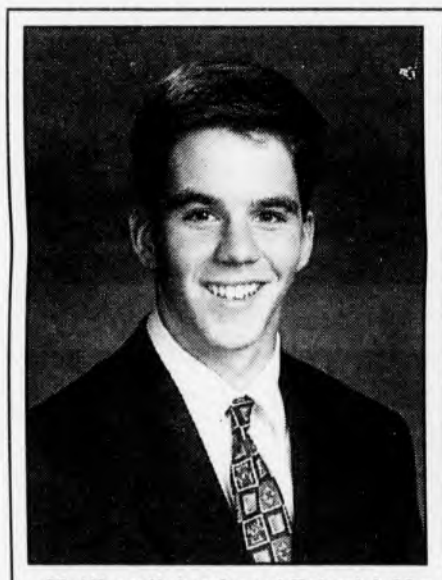
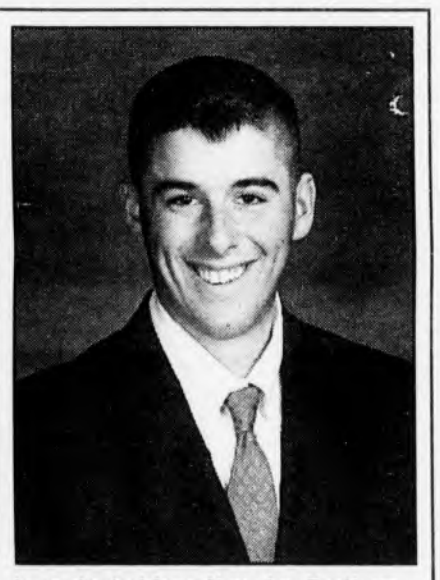
SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY

We send Ruth and Harry Goodwin special greetings this week! They celebrated their 58th wedding anniversary June 17, and we hope that their day was an especially happy one! After all, they are a very special couple!

PROVIDENCE GRADUATES



Providence College held their graduation recently, and there were three Cohasset grads present! Katherine Ridge of 30 Norfolk Road was awarded a bachelor's degree in social work; Megan Staunton of 30 Rustic Drive was awarded a bachelor's degree in social science; and Christopher Stevens of 86 Beach Street was awarded a bachelor's degree in management. Here's to a wonderful (and profitable) future to all of you!



UMASS GRAD

Michelle T. Boyle, daughter of Arthur and Judith Boyle of Cohasset, graduated from Amherst College May 24. She majored in economics, and received Amherst's bachelor of arts degree. Michelle is a graduate of Notre Dame Academy.

XAVERIAN GRADUATES

On Sunday, May 17, Xaverian Brothers High School held its Commencement Exercises for the 32nd year and bestowed 142 diplomas to its graduating seniors. Two Cohasset students earned their diplomas from Xaverian: Matthew K. Lewis, son of Kevin and Margaret Lewis of 7 Heather Drive. Matt was the recipient of the Kevin M. King Memorial Scholarship, which is presented to the senior who best demonstrates superior motivation and meritorious effort at each step of scholastic life in the Xaverian community. Matt earned a Silver Medal for academic achievement in English, was a member of the National Honor Society and achieved honors in all four years. He has enrolled at the United States Naval Academy. And, Robert J. Moody III, son of Robert and Sharon Moody of 80 Forest Avenue, who will be attending Union College in the fall. We offer hearty congratulations to you both!

Matthew K. Lewis and Robert J. Moody graduated from Xaverian Brothers High School.

BC HIGH REPRESENTED

Boston College High School announces that two Cohasset students graduated from there May 24. They are Jason S. McCaffrey and Martin P. St. John. Congratulations go to both of you gents!

FARMERS' MARKET UNDERWAY

Isn't it great to see the Cohasset Village Farmers' Market underway again! In case you missed the first two, it is held every Thursday from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m., and you can enjoy many things! Not only do they have organic produce, strawberries and seasonal fruits, herb plants, perennials, baked goods and jams, seasonal veggies, Peace Meal bread, fresh and dried flower arrangements, honey products, lobsters and more, they feature special events each week! On the first and third Thursday they have live folk music, and there are live cooking demonstrations on the second and fourth Thursdays. There will be many additional surprises throughout the season, so plan on attending each week! Join the activities on the Common, meet tons of people and ENJOY! On a personal note, we had some of the scrumptious strawberries that were offered last week, and they were outstanding!

FESTIVAL ON THE COMMON

Finally, don't forget about this special weekend on the Common — The South Shore Art Center's 43rd Annual Festival on the Common and the eighth Annual Strawberry Festival! There will be something for everyone, juried art and juried photography exhibitions and members show; young artists show and demonstrations, concerts, kids' tent (they do all sorts of art work, and love creating their very own masterpieces); lobster dinners; fiddlers — you name it, it will be there! You can even buy a piece of the wooden flagpole that was removed from the Common last year, for a $10 donation to the South Shore Art Center. It is already cut and sanded, and you can decorate the piece yourself with materials from the activity tent, or you may commission a South Shore Art Center Gallery artist to paint a scene of the Common on it for you!

HONORS STUDENT

We salute Ashley Wilfand who was inducted into the Cum Laude Society May 21 in Thayer Academy's Southworth Library. A reception and dinner was held in the students' honor, and we are all proud of Ashley for "making the grade."

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE

Then, top everything off with a truly superb strawberry shortcake at the Second Congregational Church. The church members make the best shortcake, then top them with tons of yummy strawberries and oodles of whipped cream — yummy in the tummy! People now come from everywhere to partake in these shortcakes, and some go every night!

The whole event is memorable, plan on spending the weekend on the Common.

'THE WIZ' AT THAYER

Speaking of Thayer Academy, the Middle School staged "The Wiz" recently and there were two Cohasset students in the cast! We hear that D. J. Lanzillotti and Leigh-Anne Walsh were wonderful in their roles — we are sure to hear more about them and their acting/singing prowess!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Farewell, Bourke

"Bourke is likely to be remembered in every laugh that echoes through this small town,"

—a classmate.

As the Rev. Gary Ritts so eloquently said Sunday, Bourke Corcoran's many friends knew something we didn't. "His friends all knew. They have shown his family, this community, what it means to be together," the Rev. Ritts said in Sunday's memorial service for the 18-year-old who would have graduated Saturday.

In the days that followed the terrible news that one of Cohasset's own had been senselessly lost in a tragic car crash, the teenagers of this town reminded the rest of us what it's like to be young and how to enjoy the moment.

What they lacked in numbers — Bourke's graduating class had only 61 students — they more than made up for in heart.

With their hugs, they shared with us the legacy of a young man who touched them all through the simple act of friendship.

One classmate recalled being a new tenth-grader with no friends. "He introduced me to people, so I wasn't that new kid sitting alone," he said.

Another recalled inviting Bourke to a party with his Milton Academy friends and feeling obligated to stay at his side.

"But in Bourke's case that was unnecessary," he said. "Upon arrival, he left my side to go meet people." By the time another Milton Academy student from Cohasset had arrived, Bourke was introducing them to Milton students.

One by one at Sunday's memorial service, at least a dozen students recalled Bourke's touching, humorous antics and practical jokes that always included the common thread of kindness.

"He was a friend, brother, boyfriend, class clown and was and still is the most unique person around," a girl said.

"All the memories we have are so precious — I know you'll keep helping us as we continue to grow," she said.

"Bourke had unique qualities like growing a beard in the seventh-grade," laughed another. "He was always fun to be with because of his creativity. He was like the icing on the cake, the party wouldn't be the same without his presence."

"He had a pager and every time he got a page, Bourke would say 'somebody loves me,'" another said.

"He was always there with listening ears, an open mind and big heart that never stopped giving," a friend said.

One girl said the class members will now be "Bourke's disciples."

"That's us spreading the smiles as Bourke would have on other people's faces," she said.

Through the tragedy of this past week something changed in all of us. This town pulled together and paused to reflect on how to appreciate all of life's priceless moments.

"Now is all we have," Rev. Ritts said. "Life is not lived in length, it's lived in depth."

Rev. Ritts said as our feelings move toward more of an equilibrium, it's important not to forget what Bourke has taught us all. He asked that each of us light a candle in a window every night this week as a reminder.

"We must continue to embrace our families and each other whenever we have the opportunity — because Bourke in his new, complete, whole form, lives on," he said.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Proud of CHS administrators

TO THE EDITOR:

With all the negative press that schools seem to get these days, I find myself proud to be a parent of a child at Cohasset High School.

This past week's tragedy will forever be in the minds of the students and many parents who are involved with Cohasset High School. Nothing can change the tragic accident and the loss of a son, brother or friend. But Cohasset High School, led by Mr. Collins and Mr. Delorenzo, responded to the crisis with professionalism, compassion and true understanding of the students' needs. Cohasset is so lucky to have these two individuals as the leaders of our high school.

Thank you for being there for our youth and the community.

Neighbor's Action Praised

TO THE EDITOR:

Your June 11 article regarding the accident on King Street did not mention the kind actions of our neighbor Victor Vanderlugt. When Victor and his wife Justine heard the crash they ran outside immediately and dialed 9-1-1. Upon hearing Leigh Atherton's cries for help, Victor searched the woods and when he came upon the horrific scene, went immediately to the boys' assistance, staying with them until help arrived. While the tragic outcome of this particular accident could not be changed, I am grateful to know I live in a neighborhood where a cry for help is not ignored.

Arts grant appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the students at Cohasset High School and the Arts Boosters, I would like to thank the South Shore Playhouse Associates for their generous grant to our effort.

We are fortunate in Cohasset to have dedicated teachers and talented students and parents who want to see that the arts continue to thrive in our community and in our schools. This grant will help us in our effort and will be used wisely by the Arts Boosters.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates and the South Shore Music Circus are true assets to the town of Cohasset. The members of the Arts Boosters send our sincerest wishes for the best season yet in 1998.

Greenbush rail revival backed

TO THE EDITOR:

What wonderful news for South Shore commuters that an impartial federal agency has determined that commuter rail service to and from Greenbush will improve our air quality. Although this report, prepared for the United States Corps of Engineers, will apparently need some adjustment, it should encourage the exasperated hoards of us who periodically, if not daily, frantically force ourselves into a choking maelstrom of stop and go trucks, trailers, buses, and one-passenger vehicles – the latter to be parked in town at shocking rates.

The small proportion of each town's citizenry who choose to live adjacent to the Greenbush right of way merit our sympathy. However, the vociferous individuals of this minority have self-interestedly stalled for the majority of South Shore townspeople the revitalization of beneficial mass transportation. These individuals have thwarted the interests of the 90 percent living further away from the proposed tracks, and they have consigned to us all, for years now, the absorption of unnecessary, excessively noxious, automotively-generated gases – not to mention the perpetually needless, mental and cardiac stresses along the accident-prone, cattle-chutes to the city.

An exceedingly modest amount of vibration and daylight noise (relative to the roar of airplanes above) is a small bit to pay for:

1. Round trip daily rail transit of $7.50 versus the more expensive $13 bus or the $8 water routes.

2. A practically assured, comfortable seat (as on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines).

3. The privilege of a highly quali-

Lessons in history, life experiences

MY VIEW

MARK BELL

It was about 30 years ago when my Sharon Social Studies teacher, Mr. Plouffe, stood at the front of the class and looked out at us with one of those serious "adult" looks.

He said something like: "Look around at your classmates. As you do, know that all of you aren't going to make it. Things happen in life, they just happen. Out of a class of a hundred kids or so, one or two just won't. Things around you are going to change, and peoples lives are one of those things."

Like all kids that age we kind of laughed it off. High school is the time of emancipation from our parents and the norms of THEIR version of society. We tested them at their rules and won so many times. Some of us drank, others drove too fast, others had sex. Graduation time, yeah. We looked forward to it. This life thing? We had it made.

For our parents, graduation represented similar emancipation. Their thoughts were somewhere between pride and relief, as their expectations of freedom seemed similar to ours. The end of High School is a stepping stone for everyone, as everybody leaves High School one way or another.

Remembering that talk and the look around the room that day, I don't remember if one of the prettiest children ever, classmate Robin Halper, had already been taken away from us while walking next to the lake down Massapoag Ave. She was walking right next to another wonderful classmate, good friend Nancy, when Robin was clipped from beside her by a car. We were stung again when "cool dude" Mitch Margolis's house burned. Mitch's Dad jumped out of a second floor window first hoping to catch Mitch and his Mom next. They never came out.

So many of us have stories like these. They're about kids that we all grew up with and the people we always saw around town. These are the people in our lives who exist like the street signs and the buildings. We didn't create them, they were just there. They grew with us and we grew with them. Their being was part of the heart and soul of our childhoods; part of what makes us who we are.

Too recently, history repeated itself. Speeding through the night with the spirit of youth and the horizons of life before them, Bourke Corcoran and Lee Atherton became lifetime teachers for the Class of '98, which might be known forever as the year of senseless student deaths.

There are ironies of the accident happening by the beautiful reservoir that nourished them during their lives; that they crashed through barriers society built to safely harness them in; that nature's trees stood defiant to the antics of their adolescence. But life IS ironic by nature.

The moment that classmates learned about Bourke's death and Lee's changed life will be remembered forever as a time that their guts were turned inside out and their hearts forever broken. Many went right to the scene of the accident as soon as they found out the morning after, the day of Class Night. One group of classmates was seen walking eight abreast up King Street from the site. NOBODY walks on the typically busy, fast street like that, but this morning was different as, strangely, few cars went by. The kids owned the street this morning, as their class had paid for it the night before. They were going to make it to the end of the street their classmates did not, as their defiance of the dangerous street was more powerful than any fear of its dangers. They needed to beat it, and they did.

Just like I'll never have pretty Robin or cool Mitch back again, the Cohasset Class of '98 will never have Bourke and Lee back as they were before the crash. Nobody's really ever the same as before. The soul of the class has been forever altered and in its place is the realization that their Mom's and Dad's, and all the Mom's and Dad's, can't fix this one. It's the experienced reality for all the old adults, and fresh for the newly christened ones.

On Cohasset '98's graduation day the skies poured six inches of rain over the region, and on the day meant to honor Bourke, the clouds opened long enough for us to see the sunshine. More rain then we've ever seen on a day, as if symbolic tears, and sunshine when we needed to group together, perhaps symbolic of our collective hope that this is the end of horror for the '97-98 school year.

Mr. Plouffe taught my class history, and that history repeats itself. We never thought it would happen to us, so of course we couldn't prepare to see it happen to our kids when we grew up. Perhaps there is no way to prepare, but for so many of us, we've now learned both ways.

The Cohasset Class of 98 will always have 61 students in its heart, and for all of us who had more souls than bodies at commencement, it'll never hurt any less.

Those Southern Baptists are at it again

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Southern Baptists, who very often choose to follow their own drummer when they don't think the communal beat is right, have done it again.

Their convention in Salt Lake City last week adopted a new 18th article of the Baptist Faith and Message, that reads: "A wife is to submit graciously to the servant leadership of her husband, even as the church willingly submits to the leadership of Christ."

Furthermore, husbands are required to provide for, protect and lead the family while a wife has "the God given responsibility to respect her husband and to serve as his 'helper' in managing their household and nurturing the next generation."

I want to be a fly on the wall when the nation's First Baptist, Bill Clinton, lays that law down to Hillary, who probably hasn't been near a kitchen since that infamous cookie bake-off (on paper) with Barbara Bush six years ago.

Geez, just when women are finally achieving equality with their men folks, the Southern Baptists have to come along.

Didn't Sheriff Joe Arpaio just create an equal-opportunity chain gang in Maricopa County, Ariz., wherein convicts of the female persuasion are finally given the chance to don leg irons and join their men in picking up trash, pulling weeds and painting over graffiti.

"I feel that women should be treated just like men," said Sheriff Joe — so why has NOW never given him a dinner?

Didn't our own MCAD just order attorney Judith Nathanson to pay Joseph Stropnicky of Beverly $5,000 in "emotional distress damages" for refusing to represent him in a divorce case on grounds that she takes only women clients.

Stropnicky testified that "this gender-based policy made me feel angry, humiliated and defeated. I didn't think that a lawyer could refuse to represent me because I'm a man. I thought it was outrageous."

NOW's Pat Ireland couldn't have put it any better.

And how about the appearance in comic books, the bibles of the younger generation, of Sister Shannon Masters (aka Areala), the superhero leader of 13 warrior nuns who "provide the thin line of defense between Earth and the power of Hell." Who needs Superman?

But I digress . . .

Southern Baptist Convention delegates, explained the Rev. John Setchfield of Marion, N. C., "would love to see a more traditional family structure. There has to be more creative ways to nurture our children." Hence the 18th article.

Isn't that similar to last year's pronouncements by Afghanistan's Department for Promoting Virtue and Preventing Vice (aka "the religious police")?

"It is forbidden for women to visit male patients in wards where unrelated males are hospitalized.

"Women working in the medical sector should not sit in the seat next to the driver during transportation."

And the best admonition yet:

"Women are duty-bound to behave with dignity, to walk calmly and refrain from hitting their shoes on the ground, which makes noises."

But the Southern Baptists declaration is not as strict as it sounds.

"I don't know anyone who would say 'If you don't believe this, you can't be a member of our church," said Herb Hollinger of the church's executive committee.

Bill must have been glad to hear that.

In view of our nightmare commuting, thoughtful people should speak more fervently in endorsing the railroad cure with its convenient, dependably on-time scheduling (as witness the other lines), and its happily proposed, less expensive ticketing.

Greenbush rail restoration

TO THE EDITOR,

I am writing in regards to the ongoing Greenbush controversy. It makes absolutely no sense to go forward with this wasteful proposal to restore diesel trains along the Greenbush line. For all the problems and expense that this proposal would cost, there are many viable and less costly alternates to seriously consider.

• A better alternate to building miles of track and stations along the coastal route would be to construct a major rail stop at the new interchange to be built along route 3 in Hingham to service the South Weymouth Airbase project. To construct a rail spur from the South Weymouth station out to the new Route 3 interchange would be much less costly and would do much more in removing traffic from the major commuter route of the South Shore. This new terminal could be constructed similar to the Quincy Adams terminal in Braintree. By providing this station further to the south, the Braintree and Quincy Adams stations could free up some additional spaces for commuters in those areas. Right now these stations fill very early in the morning, forcing all the local area commuters to travel closer to Boston in search of parking to take the "T" to work. The new station could also become a bus terminal pick-up and drop off for extending the "T" bus routes into the surrounding towns, which currently pay for service but receive no direct service.

• The recent announcement of the addition of Catamaran type boats to the commuter boat service should be expanded rather than ignored. Commuter boat service on the South Shore is wonderful. These new boats will cut the commute from 35 minutes to 20 minutes. The new train will take 50 minutes. There is no easier way to the city. It makes the most sense, to use this water resource, as a commuter route.

• Another positive announcement recently was the proposal from the developer responsible for the revitalization of the Hingham Shipyard area. His proposal calls for a new Commuter Boat and Harbor Islands terminal as well as a new parking facility. This is a fantastic opportunity to really help the transportation network on the South Shore. The new area should also offer a bus terminal pick-up and drop off for extending "T" bus routes into the surrounding towns. This would allow a direct commuter link onto the boats. Currently there is no service directly to the boats.

• Another option for the old Greenbush tracks would be to construct a real bikeway, which would connect all of the coastal towns. This bikeway could be modeled after a very successful bikeway in the suburbs to the northwest of Boston. The Minuteman bikeway runs through the Concord-Lexington area and connects directly to the Alewife "T" station on the Redline. The Greenbush bikeway could connect to the trails of Beals Cove Park and also follow the old rail spur out to the Hingham Shipyard. Here you have a direct connection to the Commuter boats or the Harbor Islands. The bikeway could also be extended beyond Greenbush to eventually connect all of the coastal towns down to the Cape Cod Canal. What a great use for residents as well as a boost for tourism. An opportunity to travel by bike and explore all of the coastal towns.

• The Discovery Channel recently featured a high-speed electric Monorail type transportation system, which is now in use. It is a single-track system, easy to construct, and very energy efficient. This system could be constructed along the right-of-way down Route 3 with little disruption in the communities which it would serve. This is a form of transportation that would have a positive effect on the South Shore.

• These options are real possibilities and should be studied as real alternates. The possibility of destroying all of these coastal communities with incredible amounts of grade crossings, pollution, filling in of wetlands, loss of a community (downtown Hingham) and the disruption of this wonderfully preserved piece of history should not be tolerated. It is not overreacting. The threat is real. These possible alternates are modern solutions and offer a variety of commuting options. It is time to respond and become active to stop the diesel rail one and for all.

Hats off the Health Board

TO THE EDITOR,

The Board of Health deserves congratulations for its unanimous 3-0 vote on June 9 to have Site Assignment Hearings to consider rescinding, amending, or suspending the Site Assignment of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

Many people have asked me why the Board of Health did not take a vote that night to close CHL down, since it seemed like they had the evidence and inclination to do so. However, Cohasset residents need to know that the Board of Health could not have taken that action, and that the most severs action that the Board could have taken that night was to do exactly what they did: vote to hold Site Assignment Hearings. Under the state Solid Waste Act, the Board of Health does have the authority to amend or rescind the Site Assignment for a landfill, but only after a duty noticed Site Assignment Hearing.

Now, that they have voted to hold the required Site Assignment Hearings, it is a very important for every Cohasset resident to attend the Hearings.

There were no TV cameras in sight but the graduation speakers had to compete with resounding thunder and torrential rain that whipped at and pelted the canvas tent.

"You've handled yourselves extra thoughtfully, tastefully and courageously," Collins told the graduates.

In his graduation address, School Committee Chairman Rick Shea, who coached Cocoran in youth basketball, said Cocoran's personality matched that of the class.

"You have stuck together and supported each other and for that I congratulate you."

Shea urged the graduates not to be afraid to be different. He said the most interesting people he's met did not know what they wanted to do with the rest of their lives at the age 18 or even at 25.

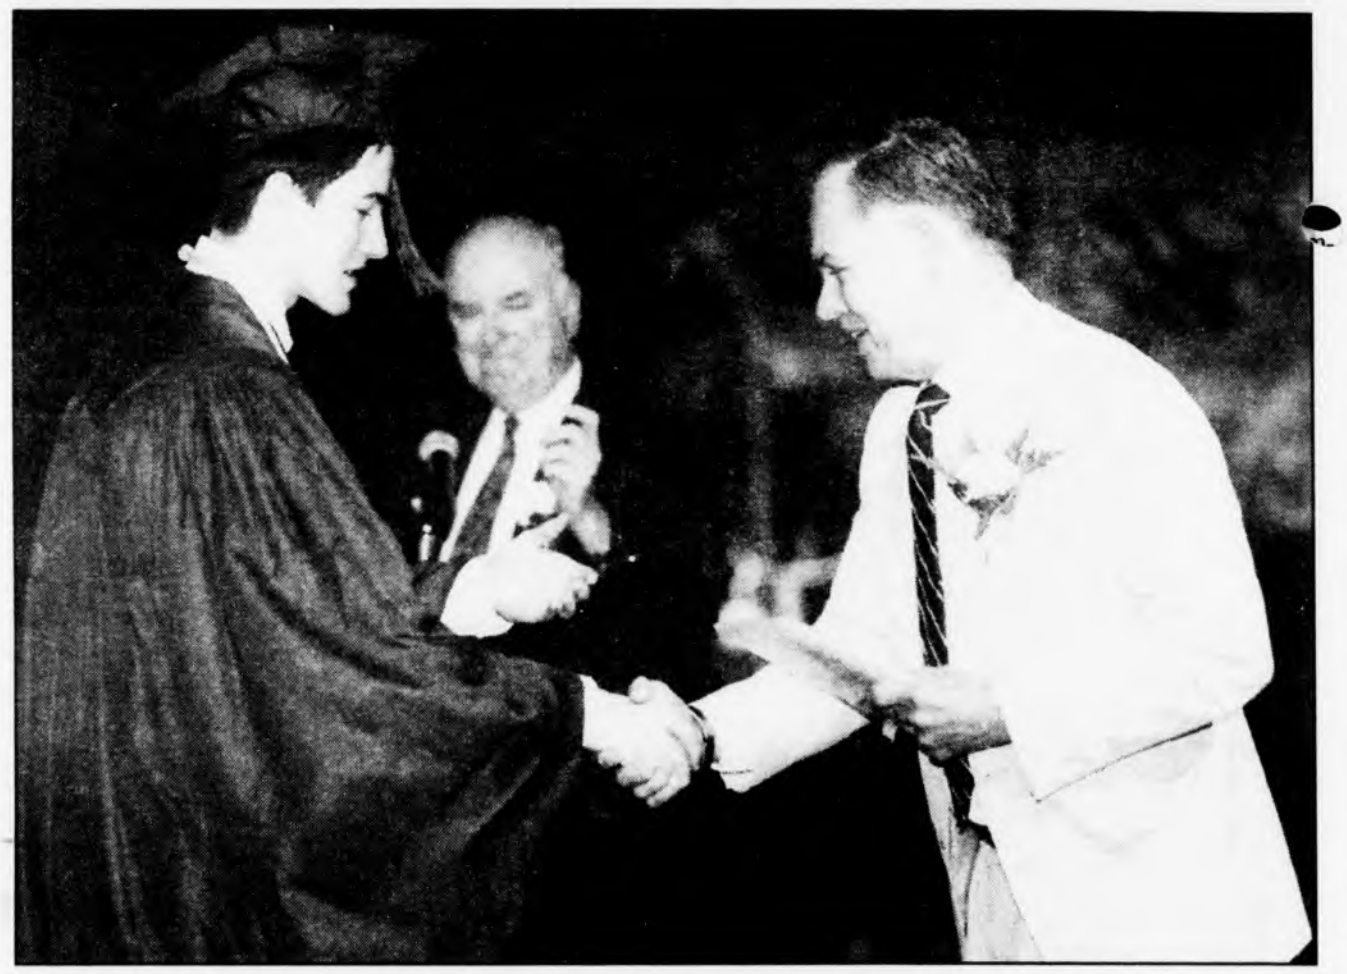
"Find your voice and sing your song," he said. "Don't be afraid to take on new challenges and have the patience to follow a winding career path."

Class valedictorian Kathleen Buckley said what the class lacked in size it made up for in talent whether in music, drama, athletics or academics.

The size of the class, small even by Cohasset standards, Buckley said, afforded everyone the opportunity to get to know one another. She said the events of the past few days brought them closer together in grief but taught them how someone like Cocoran can touch many lives.

Buckley told her classmates to always remember the past but to focus on what is to come.

"The future is a secret yet to be revealed," Buckley said. "Go out into the world and make a difference, Class of 1998."



"I've always known you were special. But in the past week you've conducted yourselves with love, support, dignity and grace. I love you all. I've been honored to be your teacher and your friend."

EILEEN ROHRER, TEACHER

Principal Collins read the names of all the award recipients. Class night, during which scholarships and awards are usually presented, was canceled Wednesday due to the tragedy.

Then each carrying a single rose and wearing a yellow ribbon of remembrance, the 55 seniors, one-by-one received their diplomas and paused briefly to place their roses in a basket by a memorial to Cocoran in front of the speaker's podium.

William "Leigh" Atherton, the driver of the car in which Cocoran was killed, received supportive applause as he walked up to receive his diploma.

National Honor Society member Andrew Ross receives an award from NHS advisor Paul Narkeiwicz.

The graduates, who each had Cocoran's initials "BC" taped on the top of their caps, had all written messages on a piece of white poster board with Cocoran's photograph in the center.

In a final touching moment, the last diploma — the one for Cocoran — was accepted by his classmate Nathaniel B. Cotter, at the request of Cocoran's family. When Collins announced Cocoran's name, all in attendance stood and applauded.

"Bourke if you only knew how many people loved you and truly cared," was a written message on the poster board from one classmate.

But as the lights blinked and thunder ricocheted overhead, one felt that somehow Cocoran indeed knew.

Hundreds gather to remember high school senior

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It was as much a celebration of a young life lived fully as the mourning over the loss of a popular teenager killed in an unspeakable tragedy.

The Memorial Service for Bourke L. Corcoran on Sunday drew upwards of 800 people who overfilled two churches hooked up by an audio system while still more clustered in groups outside the open First Parish Church windows in an effort to come together and recall a remarkable young man.

The friendly, outgoing Cohasset High School senior's life was cut short last week in a car accident just four days before graduation and left this seaside town of 7,000 stunned.

Those coming to pay their respects walked slowly across the Town Common from all directions filing into the First Parish and Second Congregational churches to a piano solo of Elton John's "A Candle in the Wind," played by Corcoran's classmate Kelly Tufts.

Corcoran's gift for friendship was reflected through dozens of tributes delivered by his classmates during the 90-minute ecumenical service that included members of the clergy from all the churches across town.

"His devoted sense of friendship was a constant in our ever-changing lives," said one student.

"He loved being around people," another recalled. "He loved being popular, he was loved by so many because he returned love to so many."

Through laughter and tears, the teenagers fondly recounted doughnut fights, sleepovers, practical jokes and a friend who was always there for them.

"You were always there with listening ears, an open mind, and big heart that never stopped giving," said another teenager.

"Life is not lived in length, it's lived in depth. Bourke knew this. He knew how to enjoy the moments of his life. He lived deeply."

THE REV. GARY RITTS

The Rev. Gary Ritts, who led the service at First Parish, said we live under the illusion that life is lived in length.

"Life is not lived in length, it's lived in depth," Ritts said. "Bourke knew this. He knew how to enjoy the moments of his life. He lived deeply."

Ritts said the quote under Corcoran's yearbook photograph in which he said, "In the event of my demise, when my heart can bear no more, I hope I die for a principle or belief I have lived for" has left many wondering.

"We will constantly be tempted to say 'what if,'" Ritts said. "To say to ourselves, 'if only.'

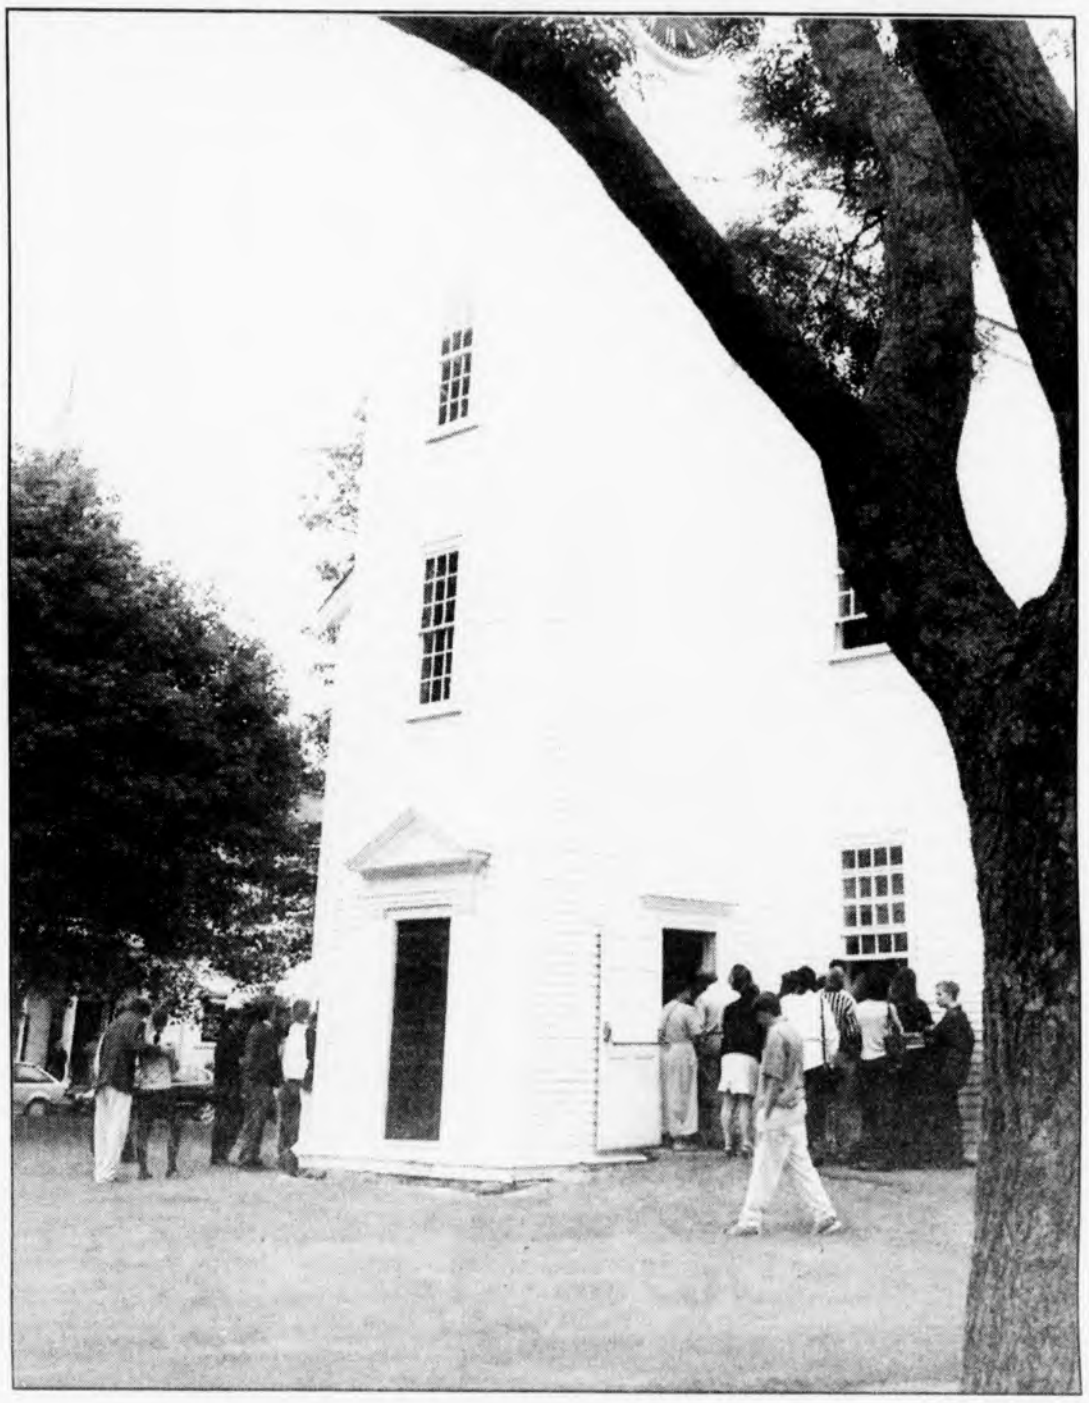
"But that reflects our temptation to live a shallow, lengthy life.

"I believe living deeply is the principle Bourke lived. What is happening right here is because of him. What his friends all knew, they have shown his family, this community, what it means to be together."

Ritts asked that everyone light a candle in a window every night this week in memory of Corcoran.

He noted that Corcoran was such a "people person" that there wasn't a photo to be found of him that didn't include someone else. Ritts said even the photograph used for the cover of the memorial service program had to be cropped.

He said standing together is the best way to honor Corcoran's memory.



"We are not the same as we were Tuesday night," Ritts said. ..."The memory of this week will never leave this town, ever."

He urged everyone to continue to embrace their families and each other.

Corcoran's schoolmates Andrew Ross and Gregory Bilton performed a duet "Did You Ever Look So Nice;" Catie Campbell sang "Friends;" and Kate Buckley, Lindy Holway, Bilton, Josh Flanagan, Ali Kinchla, Jason Dupre and Ross sang "I Will Remember You."

The entire congregation sang "Amazing Grace."

A reception for family and friends was held at the Second Congregational Church following the service.

Bourke L. Corcoran

Bourke L. Corcoran, 18, died June 10 from injuries sustained in a car accident.

Mr. Corcoran, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, leaves his parents Bourke and Merlyn Corcoran; a sister, Elizabeth Corcoran; his grandparents, William B. Corcoran of Summit, NJ and Godfrey and Muriel Moll of Springfield, Missouri; aunts, Clara Corcoran, Laura Corcoran, Karen Thomas and Carol Frank and cousins, Brian and Cory Corcoran, Nicholas Covino and Jason and Samantha Thomas.

Burial was in Woodside Cemetery Monday. Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Hagerty Property plan picks up speed

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Once mired in disagreements, the committee that spent five years studying what to do with the harbor front Hagerty Property has something that eluded it in the past.

Momentum.

The committee Wednesday voted 4-3 to go ahead, pending an OK from the selectmen, and apply for permits.

The one-vote margin came after several members went on the record with doubts the town will ever successfully develop the land for boating and passive recreation. Nonetheless, the project appeared to be on the fast track five days later. Monday, Hagerty Property committee member Veneta Roebuck took the plan to the selectmen and won a rubber stamp from the board. In a telephone interview Tuesday, Roebuck estimated construction could start as early as the spring. She estimated the plan would take three years to finish. It is expected to cost $150,000 to repair and improve the retaining wall and build a parking lot and a walkway to Government Island.

With the selectmen's approval, Roebuck was to authorize engineer John Modzelewski to go ahead and produce the final version of the plan. The next hurdle, winning a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers, is expected to take 90 to 120 days. Eventually, the town will also need permits from the local zoning and conservation boards, the state Department of Environmental Protection, the coastal zone management agency and the federal environmental protection agency, she said. However, the ACE has already reviewed a preliminary plan, and an approval of the final plan is expected.

The next hurdle, winning a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers, is expected to take 90 to 120 days. Eventually, the town will also need permits from the local zoning and conservation boards, the state Department of Environmental Protection, the coastal zone management agency and the federal environmental protection agency.

At Wednesday's meeting engineer John Modzelewski explained the changes he needed to make in the preliminary plan to ease it past the review by the ACE. After the army engineers flagged the project's impact on the salt marsh, Modzelewski worked out an alternate plan that did not call for putting fill in the marsh. However, the solution did reduce the width of the walkway to Government Island and require a change in the layout. It also cut down on the number and the size of legal parking spaces. The parking lot will now accommodate 27 parking spaces plus one space for handicapped drivers. In the last round of changes, two parking spaces went to avoid filling the salt marsh. Then three more parking spaces were lost, after marine biologist Kevin Ulmer explained where architects intended to put a small addition to the Hagerty House, now the Lobster Lab.

After his presentation, the committee discussed strategy but decided its best course would be to go along with the changes the ACE wanted.

The town paid $470,000 for the Hagerty House and the property around it five years ago partly because the site provided the only place for the public to launch boats. Committee members ranked among the strongest critics of the purchase. Russ Bonetti, for instance, previously questioned the price tag—too high for a property that would primarily benefit the wealthy.

"Everyone's paying for it, and not everyone uses the boats," he said. But Roebuck previously defended the purchase on the grounds buying the Hagerty Property protected the town, and Bonetti agreed the purchase did expand public access to the harbor. It also protected the harbor from potential industrial pollution because the property was zoned for light industrial use and could be used for light industry if the town did not take it off the market.

Originally the selectmen wanted to demolish the Hagerty House. But the town meeting voted to lease the building to Ulmer for the research lab.

MBTA, Corps ironing out concerns over Greenbush

More study needed

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

MBTA officials are confident the Greenbush project will stay on track, despite some recent setbacks.

The transit authority hopes data it is preparing to deliver to the Army Corps of Engineers in the next week or so will convince the Corps, which is the lead federal agency involved in reviewing the project, that rail restoration is the best way to ease the area's transportation woes.

Whether the $285 million proposal to restore Greenbush rail service will be derailed or kept on track remains to be determined.

"We're confident the project will go forward," said Joseph Pesaturo, spokesman for the MBTA.

The Army Corps, the lead federal agency involved in reviewing the project, met with the MBTA Tuesday "to identify those areas and processes which will allow us to gather more information (about Greenbush from the MBTA) and proceed accordingly," said Larry Rosenberg, spokesman for the Corps. "It was a pretty routine meeting."

Hingham's Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan, who opposes rail restoration, likens the ongoing process to the Battle of the Bulge.

"The enemy forces have made a desperate attempt to storm through our Army to the sea. . . . There have been many losses and no ground gained," he said. "No one had much confidence in the information provided by the MBTA."

But according to Pesaturo, the transit authority is willing to provide more information because it feels the South Shore would benefit from Greenbush.

The Corps is taking a hard look at alternatives that could prove more environmentally sensitive than the 17.7-mile line, which would cut through South Shore communities, including Hingham Square.

At the end of May, the Corps released a study prepared by a consulting firm, ENSR of Acton, which stated the MBTA's ridership and environmental impact projections and analysis of alternatives for the Greenbush line — which would run from Scituate to Boston — are sketchy and flawed.

"The MBTA hasn't convinced the Corps yet that they have enough information to agree that the only way to solve the area's transportation problems is heavy diesel rail," Macmillan said.

"The enemy forces have made a desperate attempt to storm through our Army to the sea. . . . There have been many losses and no ground gained,"

ALEXANDER MACMILLAN - HINGHAM TRAIN OPPONENT

The MBTA disagreed with the Corps' assertion, stating further analysis is not necessary.

"We used information the MBTA furnished us, and our consultant made a call," Rosenberg said.

To help iron out their differences, the MBTA met with the Corps last Friday to try to convince the federal agency that the proposed rail line is the best transportation alternative.

At the meeting, MBTA officials promised to provide additional information about the rail line to the Corps' consultant at a later time.

While no specific information is available at this time as to what further information the MBTA will provide to the Corps, Rosenberg said the data is expected over the next week.

The ENSR report and the ensuing continued analysis will provide the baseline from which the Corps will further scrutinize the MBTA's Greenbush proposal and make a determination, according to Rosenberg.

"It wouldn't serve the public's best interests to make a decision without the additional information," said Rosenberg, emphasizing that the review of the proposal "is a living process."

"We understand the concerns of the public and are reacting to them," he said. "We're one federal agency that definitely takes those into consideration in our process."

Nancy Buckley, co-founder of the Coastal Coalition — a grassroots organization which supports seeking alternatives to rail restoration — said, "We are very pleased that the ACE fulfilled its responsibility on Tuesday, and we now expect acting Gov. Paul Cellucci to fulfill his obligation to bring a merciful end to this costly cycle of studies by directing his administration to abandon the project."

Macmillan said he wouldn't be surprised if the Corps finds itself in the position of having to retain yet another consultant or two as the process continues.

The Corps is comparing Greenbush with other transportation alternatives, including increased commuter boat and bus service or building a tunnel under historic Hingham Square.

In the meantime, the federal Environmental Protection Agency is attempting to determine whether Greenbush restoration would improve air quality. Two weeks ago the EPA released a study supporting the MBTA's claims that restored rail would reduce pollution by taking automobiles off congested highways. The agency is now in the process of revising the study due an error in the report which calculated the train's pollution based on 12 trips in and out of Boston rather than the 24 the MBTA proposes.

Convenience store to stay dry

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Mobil gas station at Sohier Street and Route 3A won't be selling any beer and wine, after all.

Saying there is no need, selectmen unanimously denied the request for a liquor license this week.

They were cool to the proposal when first presented by owner Paul Vercollone last month because the police chief is against granting the license.

And this week, selectmen hadn't warmed to the idea even though the 26 "disturbance" complaints the chief referred to over the past 16 months were generated by store employees who were following the company policy of not allowing cars and groups to congregate there, explained Vercollone's attorney Richard A. Henderson.

"It's important for the record to show there were no third-party complaints whatsoever," he said.

A frustrated Vercollone said it is ironic that his store's vigilance has backfired.

"It's not a hang-out," he said. "Because we're on top of it. Frankly, I'm surprised it's come back to bite us."

Vercollone explained the store is not looking to compete with package stores. He said the concept is to provide the alcohol for purely for the convenience of the customer.

"You run an immaculate business that is a credit to the town. My concern is that we don't need an additional establishment to sell beer and wine."

— Selectman Diane Sullivan

But Selectman Nan Roth said it would be offering a redundant service because there are two package stores in the area.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie Morris said it was not in the public interest to be selling beer and wine in a convenience store on a state highway.

But Henderson said there is no evidence that selling liquor at convenience stores contributes to driving drunk. Most OUIs occur after someone has been drinking at a bar or tavern, he said. The least incidence was from purchasing liquor at a convenience store.

"It's like stopping to buy milk, it's a convenience," he said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan praised Vercollone's operation but voted against issuing the license.

"You run an immaculate business that is a credit to the town," she said. "My concern is that we don't need an additional establishment to sell beer and wine."

Vercollone asked that Sullivan's positive remarks be put in the decision.

PROBLEM WITH A FAMILIAR RING

Those of us who cradle telephone receivers in the crooks of our necks are setting ourselves up for some problems. Not only does this ill-advised habit subject the head, neck and shoulders to an unnatural position, but sitting motionless as we talk on the phone virtually burnishes the improper posture into the memory of our muscles and other soft tissues. As a result, certain small muscles of the neck become stiff and tense. This leads to repercussions that can be felt throughout the entire body. The first step in resolving the problem rests with correcting the habit. The chiropractor can then work on getting the neck and shoulders back into shape.

Are you spending more time on the telephone? Could that be the reason for your neck pain? Call SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We will only accept you as a patient if we feel we can help you. Even if you don't have symptoms, professional chiropractic care is one of the best ways to help prevent spinal problems. We stress preventive health care for the entire family. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Give chiropractic a try! We're currently accepting new patients. I offer presentations on such important topics as "Raising a Healthy Drug-Free Family," "Back Safety in the Workplace," "Stress Reduction," and "Meeting the Health Care Crisis Head-on." Call to find out more.

P.S. If you consistently wake up with a stiff neck, consult with the chiropractor about your sleeping position and bedding materials.

A Weekend Up North

This past winter was not the snowy wonderland I look forward to each year, even though we were very busy at the office, sending sun seekers south to Florida and the Islands. I needed a weekend away to see lots of white snow. I was thrilled to accept an invitation from innkeepers Grigs and Pat Markham from the Windham Hill Inn.

The drive north to Windham Hill was scenic and snowy. From the moment I arrived I felt welcome. The Inn is a 160 acre historical property, formerly a dairy farm. I was given a tour through the antique embellished public rooms. The music room has over 800 CDs for guest use, a library filled with books, games, a television and piano. I was shown to my king size loft room at the top of the old barn, complete with fireplaced sitting area, Jacuzzi and balcony. I tried my best at snowshoe touring over trails and streams, where now guests hike and picnic. During the summer, you can enjoy a swim in the terraced pool, play tennis, go horseback riding, and visit country fairs.

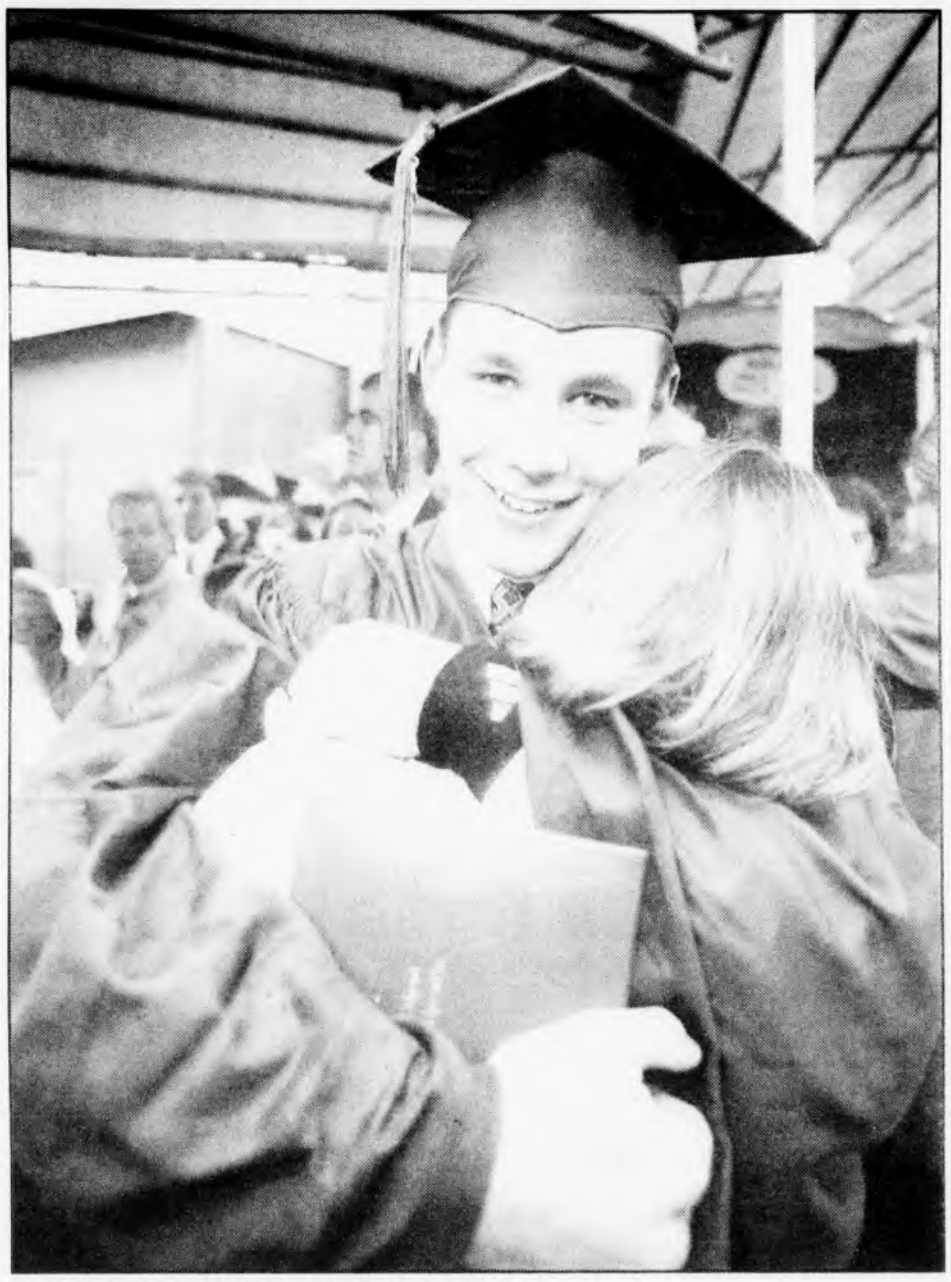
At the end of the day, I enjoyed an elegant five course dinner, complete with a choice from the inn's extensive wine list.

The Windham Hill Inn is open year round, call Scituate Harbor Travel for arrangements.

The following recipe for almond muffins is a delicious sample from the breakfast menu:

Preheat oven to 375°

1 cup flour	3/4 tsp. baking powder	3/4 cup sugar	1 tsp. almond extract
1/8 tsp. salt	1/2 cup milk	5 tblsp. butter	2 eggs separated



Cream butter, sugar and yokes. Sift together dry ingredients. Combine extract and milk. Add all ingredients alternately. Beat egg whites until stiff, fold into batter, fill 12 greased muffin cups, sprinkle with sugar and chopped almonds, bake 20 minutes. Enjoy.

Festival on the Common is this weekend

The South Shore Art Center presents the 43rd annual Festival on the Common Father's Day Weekend, June 19 to 21. Held on the Cohasset Common, the festival includes exhibitions, demonstrations, children's tent, handcrafters' booths, food vendors and entertainment. Along with the Festival on the Common, the Congregational Church will hold its annual Strawberry Festival.

Throughout the weekend there will be artists' demonstrations and workshops on the grounds surrounding the juried exhibition of visual arts and photography, an open members' show and a young artists' show. The festival opens at 2 p.m. Friday with exhibitions and more than 100 juried craft artisans, a food court and entertainment. On Friday afternoon at 4 p.m. Daisy Nell and Stan Collinson with Andy Woolf will fill the air with their guitar, banjo and fiddle, playing songs for all ages. Simultaneously, the Silver Spoon Cafe will be offering a New England lobster dinner. Pre-orders are necessary; for tickets call 383-8700. At 6 p.m. that evening, the South Shore Art Center will host the opening reception for the New England Sculptors Association Exhibition in the Art Center's Bancroft Gallery.

On Saturday, the 20th, the festival opens at 10 a.m., and from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. will feature the first-ever Cohasset Common Fiddler's Gathering. The SSAC has invited the finest traditional fiddlers in New England to enliven the festivities, representing several favorite styles including Irish, French-Canadian, Yankee, Southern Mountain and Western Swing, plus a fiddler from India playing traditional ragas on a European-style violin. From 2 to 4 p.m. Saint Stephen's Church atop Bourne's Rock at the center of Cohasset Village will host an open house. View the 14th century baptismal font in which Abraham Lincoln's ancestors were baptized, historic stained glass windows, and wood carving from Shakespeare's Stratford-on-Avon. At 3 p.m. Saint Stephen's Church will offer a presentation by Christopher Gose entitled Byzantine Iconography: History and Methods. Later that evening, the First Parish Church will host a Gospel Concert with The New Temple Singers at 8 p.m.; call 383-1100 for tickets. On Sunday, the 21st, the festival will open at noon, and you can buy a piece of Cohasset's beloved wooden flagpole that was removed last year from the Common and replaced with a modern one. For a $10 donation, festival goers can own a souvenir "slice," already cut and sanded, that they may decorate with materials from the activity tent or they may commission a South Shore Art Center Gallery artist to paint on the slice a scene of the Common. Presented will be a Father's Day concert by Watson Reid and Americana, suitable for families with young children, followed by the popular South Shore Bay Band.

There will be free parking at the South Shore Music Circus and a trolley will be available to provide a shuttle service to the Common. The Festival on the Common is made possible by the support of Leah and Peter Roy of Cohasset, BankBoston, The Patriot Ledger, Sullivan Brothers Auto Mall and many additional sponsors. For more information and a full program, call the South Shore Art Center at 383-2787. Please mark your calendars now for the 43rd year of the oldest outdoor art fair in the country!

FESTIVAL HAPPENINGS

Gospel concert at First Parish

Once again as part of the Festival on the Common, First Parish of Cohasset will present the New Temple Singers, a gospel choir, under the direction of David Coleman. The concert is scheduled for Saturday, June 20, 8 p.m., at the Meeting House on Cohasset Common, and promises to be the musical highlight of the weekend.

The New Temple Singers are a mixed chorus of singers who perform contemporary and original gospel music, and are part of the music program of St. Paul's African Methodist Episcopal Church of Cambridge. This is the group's third appearance in Cohasset. They have performed at the Joyful Noise Concert in Sanders Theater, in Hynes Auditorium and at many other community service programs.

Director David Coleman, a native of Tennessee, is a graduate of Boston University with degrees in composition and piano and has composed and arranged several of the group's musical selections.

Tickets are $7 per person in advance and will be sold in front of the church, on the Common during the festival from 4 to 7 p.m. Friday night, and from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday. Tickets will be sold at the door for $10 per person. Call 383-1100 for more information.

June 20 open house at St. Stephen's Church

In conjunction with the Arts Festival on the Common, all are invited to St. Stephen's Church Saturday, June 20, for a church and tower tour from 2 to 3 p.m., followed by a presentation on Byzantine Iconography at 3 p.m. in Walton Rodgers Hall at the church.

Come visit this venerable church at the center of Cohasset Village at 16 Highland Ave. (atop Bourne's Rock) to see the 14h century baptismal font in which Abraham Lincoln's ancestors were baptized, historic stained glass windows, wood carving from Shakespeare's Stratford-on-Avon, and a bell tower with a carillon of 57 bells (the largest weighing six tons).

The presentation titled "Byzantine Iconography: History and Methods" by artist Christopher Gosey will trace the development of the icon from its pre-Christian roots in imperial Rome and Roman-occupied Egypt to the height of its development in Byzantium and Byzantium's spiritual successor, Russia. Actual icons from the speaker's studio at various stages of completion will be on hand to illustrate the icon-making process.

Refreshments will be provided — admission is free. The open house is sponsored by the Stewardship Committee of St. Stephen's Church. For information call (781) 383-1083.

Concert schedule for festival

The musical program for this year's festival begins at 4 p.m. Friday, June 19, with a concert for families by Daisy Nell. Daisy, who resides in Essex, Massachusetts, is a popular singer on the North Shore. She has entertained countless children and adults through her work with the Peabody Essex Museum in Salem and the schooner Adventure in Gloucester. Daisy has a gift for bringing the maritime heritage of New England alive with old familiar sea shanties and stories, as well as original songs. She is accompanied on guitar and banjo by Stan Collinson, also of Essex, and fiddler Andy Woolf of Brentwood, N.H.

The program Saturday, June 20, features the Cohasset Common Fiddlers' Gathering. This event is a non-competitive fiddlers' convention, not a contest. There will be spontaneous playing here and there on the grounds, in addition to half-hour sets on the festival stage between 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. South Shore Art Center director Dillon Bustin has invited some of the finest older and younger fiddlers in New England to perform featured sets. "Walk-on" musicians may register for a few slots in the schedule held open until the day of the gathering. To provide a contrast to the American fiddle styles, Dillon Bustin has also invited some musicians originally from India to show how the fiddle has been adapted to the traditional music of that country.

Two concerts will enliven the Festival on the Common Sunday, June 21. Watson Reid of Duxbury will perform a Father's Day concert of popular American folksongs with his ensemble Americana. The selections will be especially appealing to families with young children, and the program will run from 2 to 3 p.m. At 3:30 p.m. the South Shore Bay Band will take over the festival stage for an extravaganza ranging from concert band marches to big band swing numbers to musical show tunes.

Sunday afternoon, as throughout the festival, Matthew Malloch of Weymouth will provide interludes on the Scottish pipes during stage transitions. Matthew will also play a farewell tune or two to conclude the 1998 Festival on the Common.

The strawberries are coming!

People all over Cohasset are busy preparing thousands of fresh strawberries that have just arrived for the delicious gourmet treat that is available at the Second Congregational Church Strawberry Festival. This annual event, held in conjunction with the South Shore Art Center Festival on the Common, is once again drawing people from all over New England. More than 2,000 strawberry shortcakes with real whipped cream and delicious biscuits will be served to everyone for only $3.50 at the tree-shaded patio of the church.

A country store, located in Bates Hall of the church, will be open to all Saturday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and will offer a wide assortment of handmade crafts, old-fashioned preserves and jams as well as homebaked cakes, pies and other desserts. For food staples such as hamburgers, hot dogs and soft drinks, a snack bar will be open on the Common. Proceeds will benefit a number of charities including DOVE, Mary Martha Learning Center, Wellspring and many others.

Be sure to visit and get your fill of strawberries during Friday, June 19, 2 to 7 p.m., Saturday, June 20, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Sunday, June 21, noon to 6 p.m.

Young drama troupe's production is brilliant

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Plays By the Sea drama club (CPBS) did it again.

On June 5 to 7, CPBS's cast and crew of "Into the Woods" delivered yet another astonishingly professional all-children production that brought down the house in the Cohasset High School.

"Into the Woods," a well-known Broadway musical play, with music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, is about life's "curve balls" and how quickly people can turn on each other as a result, but the play also contains messages of wisdom and morality that are comforting and useful along life's journeys.

Perhaps most enjoyable to watch was the comedic timing of this cast. Humor crosses all ages, and it's always a pleasure to see children understand humor well enough to know how to deliver it, and to hear the chuckles from the adult audience.

The characters are from familiar fairy tales who step from their original tales, as we know them from childhood, into the carefully woven plot of "Into the Woods," where they interact with each other humorously and tragically to solve problems. The "Into the Woods" script neatly ties all the threads together at the end, and concludes in a thoughtful, mostly upbeat fashion.

Written with complexity, "Into the Woods" requires musical conductorship, a sophistication that is "new ground" to the play's 17-year-old director, Ron Nicynski. He knew, however, it was something he could do, and with proper casting and an exemplary crew, he could overall achieve the results he strove for. Conclusively, there were many highlights in this production.

Narrated enthusiastically by Brian Krupczak, "Into the Woods" was professionally dressed in dramatic scenery and exquisite costumes. Song lyrics were impeccably accompanied by Kate Buckley on piano and a five-piece orchestra.

Marisa Mello and Meredith O'Hayre portrayed outstanding comedic timing. O'Hayre's great facial expressions furthered the humor in her scenes.

Ryan Story and Jim O'Sullivan showed great voice projection and control over their characters.

Katie Roche competently alternated between vulnerability and braveness as Little Red Riding Hood. She is a seventh-grader who seems to have theater down pat.

David Ingber's singing voice as Jack (And The Beanstalk) was clear and good. Pulling his comically constructed cow, "Milky White," on wheels did not detract from his natural stage presence.

Caroline Carr and Krista Nicynski, who flounced about as Cinderella's stepsisters, were appropriately bratty. Carr's ability to react with squeals and pouts added to her performances.

Performing as Cinderella, Mareth Collins-Wooley, dressed in rags as well as riches, sang like an angel. Her natural beauty made Cinderella's goodness believable.

Both Alex Russell and Joseph Nicynski made their acting debuts in this musical, and played their roles competently. As the Mysterious Man, Alex Russell gave a compelling performance; his character one that the audience watched.

Bill Kearney, as Rapunzel's prince, is tall and handsome, and also owns a good singing voice.

Grace Gardner, Cinderella's stepmother as well as this production's musical direction assistant, was predictably mean to Cinderella, and kept the audience on its toes in her scenes.

Most outstanding was Ali Kinchla, who played the Witch, a role that required lots of stamina, a great singing voice and bold acting. As a leading performer, Kinchla brought energy into all of her scenes. As a convincing bad witch, the audience subsequently was taken aback by her beauty when, in the play, she transformed into the pretty woman she naturally is. Kudos to Sarah Roche, make-up artist

The audience delighted in the song lyrics.

"It Takes Two" and "On the Steps of the Palace" were fun and entertainingly performed.

"Last Midnight," sung by Ali Kinchla, was powerfully arresting.

"Stay With Me," "No One Is Alone," and "Children Will Listen" were sung poignantly with emotion and intent.

Perhaps most enjoyable to watch was the comedic timing of this cast. Humor crosses all ages, and it's always a pleasure to see children understand humor well enough to know how to deliver it, and to hear the chuckles from the adult audience.

This production of "Into the Woods" was brilliant. It could have failed to reach the level it did, given the complicated plot and music, and the ages of its performers. But, with exception to incredibly small discrepancies, the entire cast of "Into the Woods" appeared to rise to the challenge of professional costumes and superb attention-to-detail staging, as well as the many hours of rehearsal they dedicated to the play and director. They put on a great show.

For the audience and all of those involved with the production, it was another impressive example of the theater talent in Cohasset's young community.

Original songs on sale

"Thickly Settled," a Cohasset Senior High School band, worked together for their Senior Project to raise money for the Bourke Corcoran Memorial Scholarship. Rob Buckley, Janson Dupre, Josh Flanagan and Andrew Ross recorded five original songs on sale this week, featuring "Charlie" written about Andrew's convertible you've seen around town!

Signs up for 'Anastasia' production

The Cohasset Recreation Department announced that registrations have begun for The Children's Drama Workshop's summer production of "Anastasia" Monday, June 15. Anastasia is a story about the lost Russian princess Anastasia and her incredible quest to find her true identity.

Rehearsals are held at the Cohasset High School auditorium from 1 to 3 p.m., Tuesday through Thursday, beginning Tuesday, June 30. Children ages 5- to 13-years-old sing, dance and act as well as learn technical knowledge of production such as set design and construction.

Founded by Elizabeth Deveney of Cohasset, who will direct and produce the show again this year with the help of her sisters Grace and Sara, the Children's Drama Workshop is entering its eighth summer in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. The fee for the seven-week session is $185 per child. If a child is a participant in the summer playground program with the Cohasset Recreation Department, the fee is $170. There is a $10 discount for a second child and a $15 discount for a third child.

Early registration is advised. For more information, call the recreation department at 383-4109.

No pain from the rain

ALS runners didn't mind the wild weekend weather

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

When you have the type of weather that we had over the weekend and you're trying to put together a fund-raising race, you've got to choices.

Panic or just go with the rain flow.

Marty Levenson, of Danvers and Cohasset resident Richard Kennedy, organizers of the first annual Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Run for ALS that took place last weekend in Quincy, decided to take door #2.

"You can learn a lot from kids. Despite all the rain they went out and had the time of their life," said Levenson. "Where else would you get the chance to run around in the rain and jump in puddles to your heart's content and not get yelled at? They had a ball."

More than 500 runners, including more than a few familiar faces braved the torrential downpours on Saturday to raise what is expected to be close to $25,000 for the Day Neurological Center at Mass General Hospital in Boston to help fund research into a cure for ALS (Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis), also know as Lou Gehrig's Disease.

Not a bad return for the initial investment of $100 that organizers threw in to get the ball rolling for this event.

"Without the rain, I think we would have drawn about double the runners that we did," said Levenson. "People got behind this project right from the beginning."

The run was staged in memory of Jimmy "Squirrel" Kennedy, a brother of Richard and long-time friend of Levenson who passed away last year from the dreaded disease which attacks the neurons that transmits messages to muscles through the body and eventually causes the muscles to lose strength and die.

"You can learn a lot from kids. Despite all the rain they went out and had the time of their life. Where else would you get the chance to run around in the rain and jump in puddles to your heart's content and not get yelled at? They had a ball."

MARTY LEVENSON

The same disease claimed the life of his father, Christopher, in 1989. In an ironic twist it was Jimmy, then a college student at Northeastern, who came home to help care for his father when he was in need of the extra attention.

As much as it was a day to raise money to find a cure for the disease, Levenson said it was also a great healing experience for people who have had to deal with losing a loved one to ALS.

"You can see an immediate bond form between people when they get together and start talking about what the disease did to someone they love and how they are coping with their loss," said Levenson. "ALS is such a horrible disease in the way that it takes the person. Although the body seems to be falling apart, the mind is still as sharp as ever right up until the end.

"You can see an instant connection when people talk to another person who has gone through what ALS can do."

Among the faces in the crowd was former Governor and 1988 presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, who Levenson said made a special effort to get to the event.

"Michael said he was going to be here and he kept his promise even though his elderly mother went into the hospital Firday nigh," said Levenson.

Other celebrities in attendance included Olympic gold medal winner Eric Flaim and Speaker of the House Thomas Finneran.

"There were some hearty souls out there who came through even with the extraordinary weather conditions we experienced that day," said Levenson. "The weather was never an issue with us. We were going on with this event no matter what."

For more information on how you can make a donation to the Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Run for ALS, you can call Richard Kennedy at (781) 383-608 or send a check directly to him at 5 Norman Todd Lane, Cohasset, MA 02025.

NDA's dynamic duo rules the tennis court

Szymanski and Leahy finish season unbeaten

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

Some things are meant to go together. Batman and Robin, ham and cheese, Fred and Barney and Oreo cookies and milk.

Well, you can add Scituate's Katie Szymanski and Cohasset's Meagan Leahy to the list.

This sophomore duo tore up tennis courts all over Eastern Mass as the unbeaten first doubles team for Notre Dame Academy in Hingham.

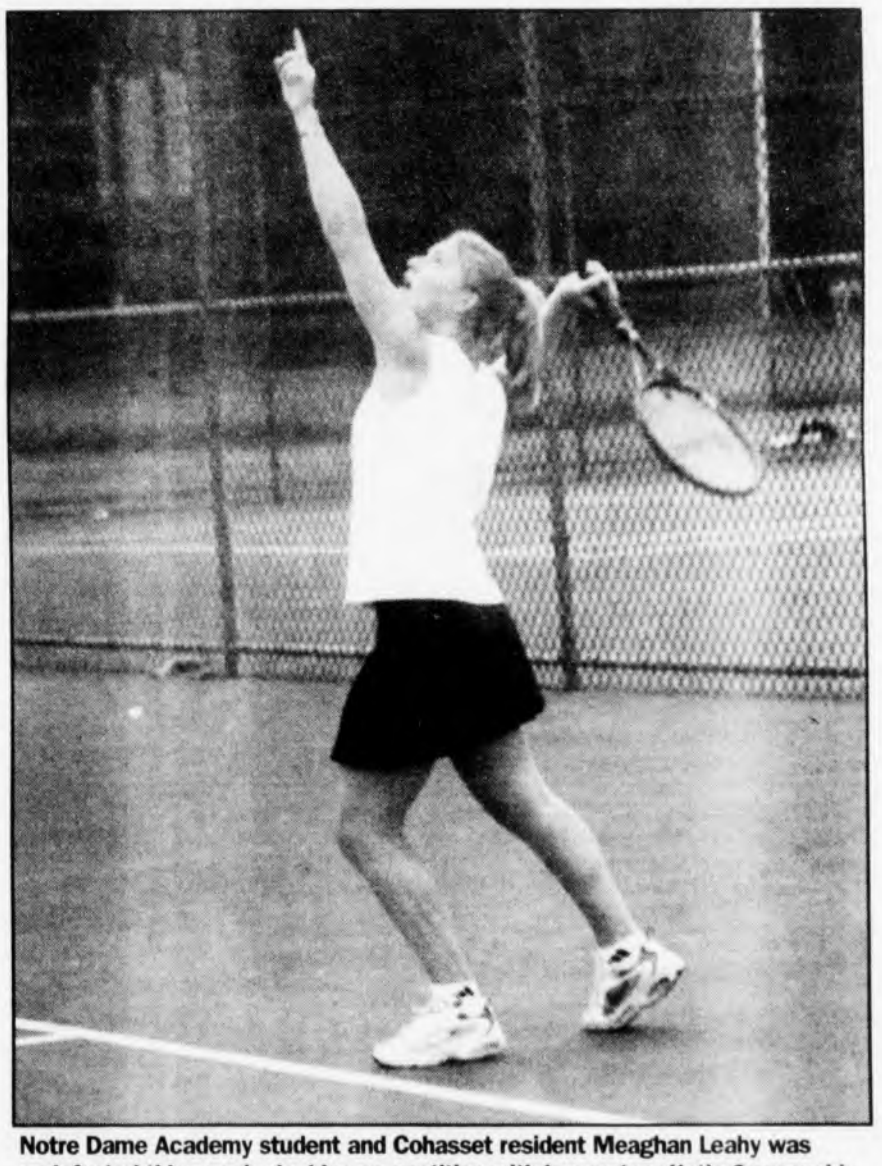
Not only did Szymanski and Leahy finish their regular season without a loss for the Catholic Conference champions, they also made it all the way to the semi-final round of the state individual doubles championships before losing to eventual champs Brookline..

In team play, NDA was eventually eliminated from the Division I tournament by Bishop Feehan in a 3-2 decision.

And as the youngest doubles team to reach the individual semi-finals, Szymanski and Leahy are considered one of the favorites to win the state crown next year.

Not too bad for their first season playing together as a doubles team.

"We've known each other and played together for a long time so it was pretty easy getting together as a team this year at school," Szymanski said. "But I don't think anyone expected us to have this kind of season. I guess we just clicked."



Szymanski, 16, and Leahy, 15, have been tennis-playing friends for the last five years at clubs like The Scituate Harbor Yacht Club, the Driftway and Mill Pond. Both describe themselves as aggressive players who enjoy playing at the net.

"We play well together and really know each other's games," Szymanski said. "Plus we're both pretty driven. We really want to win it all next year."

Leahy said talent and the ability to have fun have been the keys to their tennis success as a duo.

"We know our strengths as players but we also know how to have fun

Notre Dame Academy student and Cohasset resident Meaghan Leahy was undefeated this year in doubles competition with her partner Katie Syzmanski. The sophomore duo made it all the way to the state individual semifinals before falling to a team from Brookline.

Dads and grads say the fishing is mad

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Those that stopped fishing because of the sprinkles of the last week have missed out on a veritable horde of stripped bass and pollock moving into the waters from Duxbury north to Pemberton and out to the Graves, the Brewsters and the Roaring Bulls. John and Peter were going out rain be damned to continue to fine fishing John had encountered the previous night, namely a hefty pollock. Yep, John laid out his plan, we're fishing from Cohasset Harbor all the way around to Minot Beach.

Mike Kelley, a local fly-fisher, spent a few hours on the tip of Bassings's Beach across from Whitehead. Mike was casting his patented yellow-chartreuse Clauser over the running tide recently. Mark he says, I lost count around seventy-five. Any big ones I asked? A couple in the 30 inch range, and one bigger that took my last fly. Seventy-five you may scoff, but I don't. This is the same Mike Kelley I saw catch 10 bass in fifteen minutes under the falls at Mill Bridge late last fall.

Mike Grimm and his Dad were in tight at Strawberry Point, tossing mackerel chucks and catching bass at a good rate, mostly small keeper size. Mike's last chuck however was INHALED by a 26 pound, 37 inch striper that almost took him overboard! Dad took the boat out of gear and dashed to Mike's aid. Later as pictures were being snapped I asked Mike's Dad why he was so glum. "Need a new prop," was the discouraged reply.

Kevin Callahan of Weymouth nailed a beauty using the famous tube and worm rig. At an undisclosed location "near Minot" Kevin tangled with a 24 pound striper that made his day.

A few weeks ago, we left Fisherman Jack sputtering in the shall[illegible] of Brushy Hill Reservoir as a huge largemouth led him on a merry chase through some shoreside underbrush. As you may recall the bass ended up snapping the line. Jack went back to try again and caught the big guy's little brother, a 20 inch, 4 pound, 4 ounce bass on a Rebel lure. I'll be back for the big one Jack smiled.

Peter Parker of Cohasset christened his new boat in style. a drifted chunk of mackerel enticed a 39 inch bass out of the Grampuses. It dropped the scale to 21 lbs. 8 ounces. Scott DePol of Pennsylvania did himself proud with his flyrod. Scott fooled a 27 pound 12 ounce 43 inch bass over Minots Ledge. Even yours truly entertained a couple bigwigs from On the Water magazine at Government Island with a striper apiece within a half hour. I guess you could say the fishing is good. Don't forget to treat Dad to a fishing gift for Dad's day.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

Learn to play baseball this summer

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for a week-long baseball camp for youngsters ages 5 through 12 at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

The South Shore Baseball Camp has been contracted again this year to provide baseball camp, which will be held for one week, beginning Monday, June 22, through Friday, June 26, at Miliken Field.

Two camps are available to youngsters as follows: Full-day, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., camp for ages 7 and over, and a half-day, 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. camp is available for 5- and 6-year-olds, (age 7 optional for either half or full-day camp).

The week-long camp costs $140 per child for the full-day, and $75 per child for the half-day program.

Participants should bring lunch, snacks and any drinks, other than water, they may want. Please bring your own glove, which should be marked with your name.

Hoop summer camp registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will sponsor a Summer Basketball camp, under the direction of Ron Ford.

Based upon age, two camp sessions will be available this July. Boys and girls, ages 8 through 11, will have camp from Tuesday, July 7, through July 10, at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gymnasium.

The fee for the four-day camp is $120. The full week camp, for boys and girls ages 12 through 15, will be held Monday, July 13, through Friday, July 17, at the Sullivan Gymnasium. The fee for the five-day camp is $150.

Brochures and registration forms are available at the Cohasset Town Hall, Recreation Department office.

NDA's dynamic duo rules the court and enjoy the game," she said. "And like Katie, I think we have a good chance at winning the doubles title n[illegible]ear. We just have to keep working hard."

Leahy said being good friends also helps them on the court.

"We've been friends for a long time and have always played a lot in the summer," she said. "And because we know each other so well, we have little signals that we use on the court. Sometimes, we can just look at each other a certain way and we know what the other person wants."

Both Szymanski and Leahy play other sports at NDA but their hearts belong to tennis. (Szymanski plays field hockey while Leahy plays soccer.) Both started playing tennis at a young age and displayed early promise. They intend to play the sport in college and will continue enjoying the game as adults.

"I really enjoy the competition in tennis," Szymanski said. "It's a very fast-paced game and I like the challenge of playing in a tough match. And even if I'm not on a team or anything, I'll keep playing the game when I'm older."

For Leahy, tennis is about fun and marking her progress.

"Tennis is a really fun game and I just like being out there playing," she said. "But I also like to play well and work on all aspects of my game. There's always something you can work on."

Both want to work on their serve during the summer in preparation for their junior year at NDA.

When Szymanski and Leahy are playing tennis or hitting the books at NDA, they like to hang out with their friends and do things like going to the beach.

"Katie and I have a lot of the same friends and we like to just do normal teenager type stuff," Leahy said.

Szymanski lives in Scituate with her parents Ann and Jack. Leahy lives in Cohasset with her parents Patricia and Daniel. She has two brothers and three sisters.

Get your kicks at the South Shore Soccer Camp

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 to 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's eighth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department; first floor, Town Hall, or call 383-4109. Brochures and registration forms are available at the recreation office.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both boys and girls during the week of Monday through Friday, Aug. 3 to 7, and Aug. 10 to 14.

Should a camper wish to attend both camps, this is now possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camps must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for the camp is $195 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore soccer camp represents topflight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players for the New England area.

Bay State Summer Games holding sign-ups

Registration for the 1998 Bay State Summer Games is now open. Athletes interested in participating in Massachusetts' only Olympic-style amateur sports festival can pick up entry books at high school athletic departments and guidance offices, town recreation centers, and MVP stores.

This year's Bay State Summer Games features competition in 23 sports. For the first time, Girls' Scholastic Ice Hockey will be a part of the Bay State Games, with four regional teams competing for the gold medal.

Tryouts for all sports begin as early as May 30, and will continue through June 28. The finals will again be held over two weekends — July 16-19 and July 24-26 — at venues throughout Boston and the Worcester area. Opening Ceremonies for the 1998 Bay State Summer Games will be at the FleetCenter on July 16. For more information on specific sports, check the entry book, search the web at www.baystategames.com, or call the MASF office at (781) 932-6555.

The 1998 Bay State Summer Games are sponsored in part by Massachusetts Office of Travel & Tourism, The Boston Globe, Bell Atlantic, UMass Medical Center and UMass Health Systems, Reebok, Cummings Properties, The Yawkey Foundation, JAMN 94.5, Harvard Pilgrim Health Care and many additional contributing supporters.

The Bay State Summer Games are a project of the Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation. MASF also organizes the Bay State Winter Games and other events throughout the year. For sponsorship, volunteer, and registration information, call the MASF office at (781) 932-6555. Press releases and other information are available on the web at www.baystategames.com.

Swim team ready for another season

The Cohasset Swim and Diving team is pleased to announce the opening of another swim season.

The season opens with the first practice on Wednesday, June 24 and ends with the Championships at Wheaton College on Saturday, Aug. 15.

Allison Hughes is returning to coach the Cohasset Swim Team and Greg Bilton has accepted the position as Assistant Coach.

Dawn Meehan will return to coach the Diving team.

Important dates to keep in mind:

On Monday, June 22 and Tuesday, June 23 from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. try outs will take place at the town pool. The Team Roster will be posted on Tuesday afternoon and parents are encouraged to check the roster and pick up a registration packet if their child joins the team.

Try outs are for new members only. Returning members should have received their registration packets in Mid-May and do not need to try out.

If a returning member has not received a registration packet, please contact Irene Barry at 383-1605 or Selma Ingber at 383-9590.

Rec. dept. offers lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for adult tennis lessons for beginner and intermediate levels of instruction, by calling 383-4109.

Classes are scheduled to begin June 25, at 6 to 7 p.m. for beginners and 7 to 8 p.m. for intermediates.

Sessions are four weeks in duration, meeting one hour weekly and cost $35 for the four-week session.

Teaching will be Ms. Amanda Gontarz of the recreation department's tennis staff.

VIP Soccer Camp registration is open

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP Soccer Camp for children ages 4 to 7 years old.

VIP Soccer Camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4-7. ABC soccer is especially designed for 4- and 5-year-olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 20, through July 24. The cost is $50 per week.

Also offered by VIP is a three-hour program, meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 20, through July 24 for 6- and 7-year-olds. The cost is $80 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the front field of Cohasset High School.

For brochures and registration forms, come to the Cohasset Recreation Department office, first floor, Town Hall.

Rec offers summer playground options

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold registrations for the seven-week summer playground program ages 3-1/2 to 12 years, youth tennis ages 7 and over, and drama workshop, ages 5 and over during the week of June 15.

The registrations will be held at Cohasset Town Hall on Thursday, June 18 from 9 a.m. to noon, 1 to 3 p.m., and from 5 to 7.

The Cohasset Recreation group also offers a variety of week-long sports camps for baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, roller hockey and mixed sports. Registrations for the sports camp programs are ongoing and camp brochures and registration forms are available currently at the recreation department office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or you may call the office at 383-4109 for more information.

Learn to play lacrosse

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Mr. Chuck Jaffe will direct, again this summer, an eight-week lacrosse clinic for youngsters in grades five and six.

Clinics are held Mondays at Miliken Field, from 6:30 to 8 p.m., beginning Monday, June 29, and continuing eight weeks through Aug. 17. The cost for the eight-week, full-equipment, contact clinic is $35 per participant.

Registration forms are currently available at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Space is limited. Mr. Chuck Jaffe, a Cohasset resident and former collegiate lacrosse player and league coach, volunteers his services for this unique lacrosse opportunity.

Samuelson gives back to the sport she loves

Gold medal marathoner offers solid running advice

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Joan Samuelson zipped up the jacket of her nylon running suit and peered out over the crowd. From the makeshift stage on Pilgrim Memorial Park, the winner of the first women's Olympic marathon and two-time Boston Marathon champion could see the throng of female runners waiting to hear her speak.

Just minutes before, the last runner crossed the finish line just yards from Plymouth Rock on the local stop of the Tufts Health Plan 5K Series For Women. The early, Saturday morning downpour had turned into a slight drizzle and the sun was trying to burn through the thick clouds.

"It was a lot of fun for me to run with you today," said Samuelson. "A lot of you really dug down hard. I'm sure many of you would have liked to have rolled over in bed this morning."

The Plymouth race was the fourth of five races in the Tufts-sponsored. The final race will be held on Saturday, Sept. 26 in Providence. Previous competitions, all of them 5K (3.1 miles) were held in Springfield, Portland, ME. and Concord NH.

Samuelson is working with Tufts to promote healthy lifestyles through running and other activities. During the race, Samuelson ran alongside runners in the middle and back of the pack. She encouraged them and helped them relax when they began to tire. Samuelson ran to the finish line with a pack of runners, then turned around and went back out on the course to help some others during the final mile.

"It's a way of giving back and meeting some very nice people," Samuelson said. "It has been a lot of fun. I think some of the runners get a little annoyed when I come back and help them, but they thank me after the race."

The winner of the Plymouth race, Mary-Lynn Currier, finished in a time of 17:20. The first American woman to finish this year's Boston Marathon, and 11th overall, Currier won $500, hotel accommodations and an invitation to the Columbus Day Tufts 10K in October.

The night before, a crowd of 100 runners gathered in the Mayflower Room of the Sheraton Inn for an hour-long clinic put on by Samuelson. The runners listened intently as she answered questions ranging from how to train for certain distances, ways to break up the monotony that some runners experience, to how to deal with certain injuries.

Samuelson said an excellent way to stay motivated is to set goals for yourself, whether in races or workouts, and strive to reach them.

"You want to see gradual improvements in your training sessions as you go along," Samuelson said. "Track workouts are a great way to test your fitness. The track doesn't lie. But don't run so hard on the track that you leave your race there. It's a good idea to start slow and increase your pace with every interval. You'll leave the track with a more positive feeling and confidence."

For injuries, Samuelson recommended keeping Dixie cups with ice in the freezer. When you ice a certain area you can just tear the Dixie cup away as the ice melts. She stressed the importance of massaging the injured area with ice.

"You don't want the ice to sit in one spot," Samuelson said.

She recommended swimming as an alternative activity when injured, calling it an "absolutely wonderful" means of working out when sidelined from the roads.

Samuelson also gave some personal insights of the sport and of her unparalleled career.

Many runners, she believes, burn out and never run as well again because of the rigorous demands put on them in college. In this country, collegiate runners compete in cross country, indoor and outdoor track. There is no real "down time" for the runners to rest and regain their strength. The cycle starts again in the summer when the girls start preparing for the fall cross country season.

In high school, track coaches have the runners for a very short period of time in the spring and get the athletes in racing shape as soon as possible. "I think part of the problem is many high school coaches have the kids on the track every day," Samuelson said. "It's speed, speed, speed. They're not developing strength."

Winning the Olympic Marathon, Samuelson said, was a great moment, but she considers her victory in the Olympic trials more of an emotional race for her, and to this day, the most memorable.

Samuelson underwent arthroscopic surgery on a knee injury just 13 days before the trials. She ran conservatively at the start and wound up winning comfortably. Samuelson went on to win the Olympic Marathon three months later.

"I remember during the opening ceremonies at Los Angeles the United States was the last delegation to enter the stadium," she said. "Walking in the tunnel that led to the stadium I remember thinking to myself, 'I wonder how it would feel running through here alone.' I knew there was only one way to find out."

Samuelson broke from the pack less than 10 miles into the race and ran uncontested to the finish line. She defeated Grete Waitz, the great Norwegian marathoner, and Portugal's Rosa Mota for the gold medal.

Marshfield's Maddy Gaughran, a member of the Marshfield Road Runners who put four teams together for the race, said Samuelson has served as an inspiration for her own running for several years.

"I'm a huge Joan Samuelson fan," Gaughran said. "She's a great role model and so humble. She's one of us, but she's not — she's an Olympic champion."

Samuelson spent nearly an hour signing autographs, answering more questions and posing for pictures following the clinic.

Ted Kolota of AVP Marketing said Samuelson was the natural choice to help promote Tufts' active, more healthy lifestyle philosophy.

"It's hard to find athletes in this day and age with her kind of integrity," Kolota said. "It's very special for the runners to have her run alongside them. Joan was the first one who came to mind for the series. It just clicked right from the beginning."

Tufts' Catherine Brady, who has worked closely with Samuelson, said her fame has not affected her and people genuinely warm up to her when they meet.

"I find Joan to be very down to earth, warm and in touch with people," Brady said.

POLICE BRIEFS

Driver cited in Forest Avenue crash

Police cited Francis P. Fay III, 22, 37 R St., Hull with operating recklessly to endanger, failure to stay within marked lanes and speeding in violation of special regulations following an early morning accident Saturday.

The 1987 Chevy Cavalier driven by Fay along Forest Avenue toward Hull struck a rock ledge, flipped over and skidded on its roof about 180 feet before flipping upright when it hit the grass at 270 Forest Ave., Officer Richard Yocum said.

One of the passengers in the car, Michael Aiello, 23, of 92 Packard Ave., Hull was seriously injured in the accident. Aiello was listed in critical condition at Brigham and Women's Hospital on Wednesday.

A third person, Ronnie Papa, 18 C. St., Hull had minor injuries and was treated at the scene, Yocum said.

Both Fay and Papa were wearing seatbelts. Aiello, who was seated in the front passenger seat, was not, police said.

Alcohol does not appear to be involved, Yocum said.

Yocum said the state police are assisting with the investigation because of the serious nature of the accident.

Medflight was grounded due to the weather. Aiello was transported by Cohasset ambulance to South Shore Hospital where he was transfe Brigham and Women's.

Man injured in construction accident

A Plymouth man was injured when he fell about 25 feet from a roof at the Rose Hill subdivision construction site, 94 King St. at about 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Michael P. Russell, 33, who is employed by Donnell Construction Company, sustained broken bones and possibly other internal injuries, police said. He was listed in fair condition Tuesday at South Shore Hospital.

Russell was loading roofing material onto a roof when he lost his footing, police said.

MedFlight was called but was grounded due to the weather, dispatcher David Weeks said.

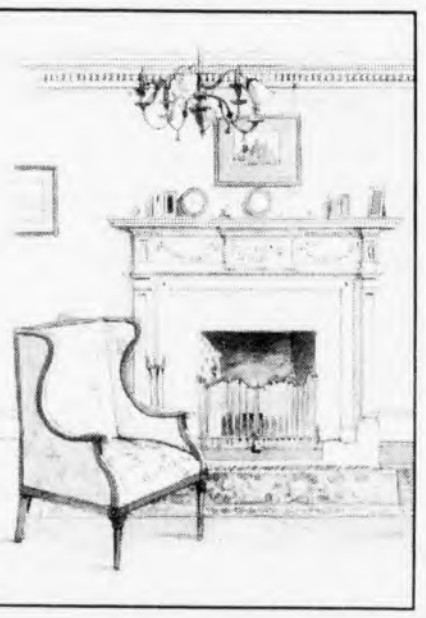
Russell was transported by Hingham ambulance which was called after the Cohasset ambulance got stuck in the mud at the construction site. Paramedics from South Shore Hospital also responded to the scene.

Rose Hill is a 14-home subdivision under construction off Route 3A across from Sunrise Assisted Living.

Roads open for residents only

Except for the streets' residents, police have closed areas of Jerusalem Road and Pleasant and Cushing streets during construction hours until further notice. Trenches are being dug for installation of the sewer main for a portion of the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects along part of those streets.

"I feel that this is needed due to the size of the equipment being used and the narrow roadways," Safety Officer Richard Yocum said. "This could create unsafe working conditions for the workers and for those traveling through the area."



Yocum said the roads will be posted "Residents Only" during construction hours.

Beach permits on sale

Your beach permits expired May 31. Beach stickers are on sale at the town hall and have the following schedule: Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Permits now being issued will expire May 31, 1999.

Sewer board sues for control of contracts

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The sewer commissioners have filed a lawsuit in Norfolk Superior Court against the board of selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad to settle a contentious dispute over who has the right to award sewer contracts in Cohasset.

Sewer commissioners Edward Guild, Gary Vanderweil, and Henry Rattenbury have jointly filed the lawsuit as private citizens. According to Guild, the selectmen and Haddad have illegally taken away the sewer commission's right to award sewer contracts.

"They stepped in and canceled contract two and that's dead wrong," Guild said. "We do not have the ability to do what we're supposed to do if they're going to interfere with our ability to award contracts. We have duties and responsibilities and we expect to have the authority to perform those duties.

But Haddad had a different opinion of the situation. He said he canceled contract two based on a ruling from town counsel that the Town Manager Act passed by town meeting superseded previous decisions by the town, and gave him the authority to award or cancel all municipal contracts. He said that his superseding authority extended to the sewer commission, which was created by a special act of the legislature in 1962, and its contracts.

"We need to have the legal question resolved in our favor if we are to continue to function. In other words, this is not a turf war over some minor matter. This entails a very important aspect of the duties, responsibilities and authority of the Cohasset Sewer Commission."
TED GUILD, CHAIRMAN

"Based on the vote at town meeting to reject additional funding for the North Cohasset project, I rejected contract two," Haddad said. "Town counsel's opinion is that under the Town Manager Act, I have the right to approve contracts, not approve contracts or award contracts. Ultimately, town meeting has the final say. The sewer commission can still carry out its duties without awarding contracts. I think it's embarrassing that the sewer commissioners are suing the town as residents."

The lawsuit stems from a decision by selectmen to cancel contract two of the North Cohasset Sewer Project. Contract two specifically dealt with homeowners near the environmentally sensitive Straits Pond area connecting into new sewer mains laid in the street under the provisions of contract one.

The North Cohasset project became problematic after bids for the work came in at $2.7 million more than the $6.6 million originally projected for the work.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris was also unhappy with the lawsuit.

"I think it's unfortunate that they filed the lawsuit," McMorris said. "The issue of who's in charge (of awarding sewer contracts) needs to be resolved. The lawsuit goes to the issues of

Quonset huts to be razed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Quonset huts at 430 South Main St. known to neighbors as the "ugliest structures in Cohasset" are about to become one of the forgotten structures of Cohasset. Developer Noel Collins has sold the property to a builder so construction on five townhouses can begin just as soon as the Quonset huts are razed. Collins said he expects the Quonset huts to be torn down within the next few days. If all goes as planned, the townhouses will be built and sold by the end of the year.

Neighbors and abutters will breathe a sigh of relief when the Quonset huts are finally gone. A group of local residents are planning a small celebration when the demolition work begins. Corinne Cahill, a South Main Street resident just two houses over from the Quonset huts, has fought to eliminate the structures for decades. She said

CHS principal gives 'the block' thumbs up

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset High principal Curtis Collins came out strong for block schedules. He told the school board Thursday why he likes the new system of dividing the school day into longer classes in fewer subjects. In a 90-minute romp through education history, the principal tried to put some perspective on a new system that pushes quality ahead of quantity but appears strange to parents and students.

"All people have agreed schools must change now. The demands of our society require it. We are no longer in the Industrial Age."
COHASSET HIGH PRINCIPAL CURTIS COLLINS

As he put it, society is undergoing a change from the Industrial Age to the Information Age, and the schools are under pressure to change with the times.

"All people have agreed schools must change now. The demands of our society require it. We are no longer in the Industrial Age." Moreover, these changes call for "systemic reform" not "tinkering." But the scope of the change may be the reason people feel uncomfortable. Block scheduling is one way to restructure the school day, and it is very different from anything most parents remember about their own education.

Collins was on the agenda to show the school committee the results of a survey about the block scheduling. Cohasset

Closing of town hall parking lot

The town hall parking lot will be sealed and re-striped on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 23 & 24, building commissioner Robert Egan said.

During that time, the lot will be blocked off and there will be no vehicle access.

Parking will be allowed on the residential side of Highland Avenue and on the north side of William B. Long Jr. Road on those days, Egan said.

Public records request denied

Edward Fegreus, 25 N. Main St., and Deborah S. Cook, 281 King St. filed a public records request for documents relative to the train describing communications between Tech Environmental Inc. and the MBTA. Fegreus and Cook are both members of the Citizens Advisory Committee appointed by state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe to review the MBTA's environmental impact report on Greenbush.

At the selectmen's meeting two weeks ago, selectmen were in possession of a memorandum which reportedly related to a telephone conversation between Tech Environmental, the consultant hired by Cohasset to review the proposal to restore the train through town, and Andrew Brennan, environmental project manager with the MBTA.

At the meeting, Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner, asked for a copy of the memo which was on the selectmen's desk. Town Manager Mark Haddad denied Ford's request saying the memo was confidential.

Haddad has also denied Cook's and Fegreus' written request saying the documents in question are interagency memoranda relating to policy positions being developed and are therefore exempt from public view.

Lunch at The Garage

Monday, June 29 at 12 noon at "The Garage" will be the first regularly scheduled lunch meeting of interested high school students who would like to share in the plans for The Garage project. Lunch will be donated by a local merchant. The project involves turning the old DPW garage in the town parking lot into a teen center.

Hard work is recognized

At its meeting last week, the Drug & Alcohol Committee presented John Small and Ken Thayer with commemorative plaques on behalf of their tireless efforts to coordinate the group's recent Car Show fund-raiser held on June 7 on the lot of South Shore Chevrolet on Route 3A. The two reported that the show "was a huge success for the town and the community with a great response from everyone who participated." In total, approximately 125 old and new cars, some valued at more than $50,000, entered into the competition which raised an estimated $6,000, half of which will go to the Drug & Alcohol Committee to donate to Cohasset's PALS Program.

New D&A committee chairman

D&A Committee Chairwoman Margo Aikens announced her resignation. Committee Co-Chairman the Rev. Cliff Cutler was voted in as the new chairperson effective immediately. The committee showed its appreciation for Aikens thanking her for her "hard work and dedicated efforts during her years of service." Cutler said that the committee is "actively searching" for at least two new members to join the Drug & Alcohol Committee for the 1998-1999 season. Interested parties should contact him at St. Stephen's Church office at 383-1083 for more information. The next scheduled meeting for the Committee will be on Wednesday, August 12 at 7:30 p.m. at the Town Hall.

RTF closed July 4

The Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility will be closed on July 4 in observance of Independence Day. It will be open on the Friday before and Sunday following the holiday.

Dump permits on sale

1998-1999 RTF Permits are now on sale at the Public Works Garage at 91 Cedar St., Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. They are also available at the Town Hall on Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Vehicle registration or proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease is required.)

Regional Recycling Cooperative starts

State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announced that legislation he has introduced establishing the South Shore Recycling Cooperative has been adopted along with the 1999 Senate Budget Recommendations. The plan proposed by Hedlund will allow South Shore towns participating in the cooperative to more effectively manage their solid waste and improve their existing recycling programs.

"The establishment of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative is a practical approach for securing a superior solid waste and recycling management plan," Hedlund stated. "This is crucial for the immediate preservation of the public convenience and protection of the environment."

The cooperative is governed by the terms of the "Intermunicipal Agreement for Recycling on the South Shore." Under the terms of the agreement, the cooperative will be authorized to negotiate the terms of regional contracts for the collection of recyclable materials. Towns initially participating in the cooperative include Abington, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Kingston, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

The South Shore Regional Disposal Planning Board has conducted a pilot program over the past four years to study the benefits of a cooperative plan. The Board's success in the pilot program shows that the cooperative proposed n this legislation should provide significant cost savings and improved service to member towns.

Initially, the cooperative will be funded through a budget amendment secured by Hedlund, which provided a $70,000grant. This is a matching fund to finance up to half of the anticipated operating expenses for the first fiscal year. The grant is contingent upon each of the member towns paying a proportional share of the remainder of these expenses.

New school is a work in progress

Construction continues at a brisk pace

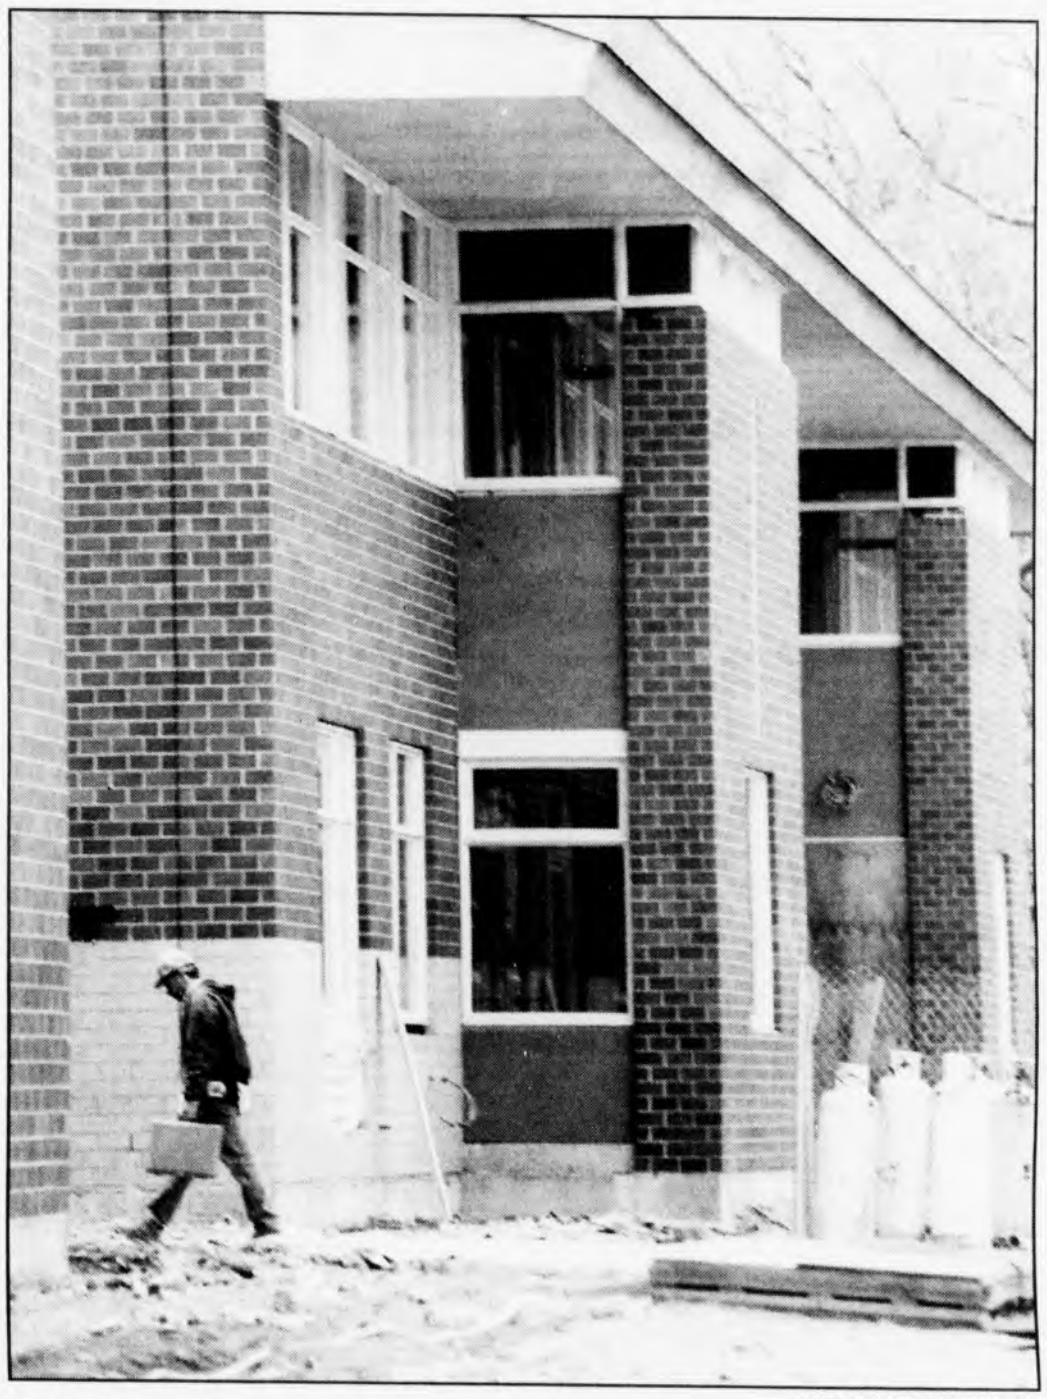
By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The calendar says it is only June. But inside the new Osgood School last week, the air smelled like September. New bulletin boards and blackboards stood stacked along the corridors. Clean maple cabinets huddled in the middle of classrooms, waiting to be arranged. With suspense building before the first day of school Sept. 2, the construction crews kept up a brisk pace. They steered wheelbarrows under ceilings stuffed with thick blue spaghetti-like strands of wire and cables. They painted halls and rooms in the sections where masons finished plastering. But in all the hurry, they still paid attention to the details and the quality of workmanship. For instance, when the shade of cream white paint in a second floor corridor did not look bright enough for the space, the painter consulted Simon Tempest, the town's project representative.

WINDOWS INTO COHASSET

The 24 Osgood classrooms will be painted in deep pastels— purple blues, turquoise and aquamarine. They are the colors of the sky on autumn nights and the sea on summer days. The floors, still unfinished, wills repeat the colors in tile patterns.

"All right, I'll pick a new color for you," Tempest said agreeing the color was not the right shade. Tempest acts as the town's surrogate eyes and ears on the project. He has built schools before when he worked as an architect in England. On this project, his insights about the purpose of color and interior design are helping to create vivid exciting classrooms.



For instance, the colors on the classroom walls and in the corridors are more than decoration. Educators now feel the colors help keep younger children interested in school work and at ease in their surroundings. The 24 Osgood classrooms will be painted in deep pastels— purple blues, turquoise and aquamarine. They are the colors of the sky on autumn nights and the sea on summer days. The floors, still unfinished, wills repeat the colors in tile patterns.

"It's a pretty good design," he said. "It's a very simple building, a straight forward building with very good material." When the children finally arrive, they will see a new building that is similar in shape, color and materials to the Deer Hill School next door. The building is red brick like the Deer Hill but with a buff colored brick on the foundation for accent.

However, it is really much bigger. To look like a natural part of the surroundings, the school was designed to look smaller than it really is. For instance, the roof is partly concealed under a series of small pitched slopes built off projections above the roof line. Again to minimize the mass, the school stands two stories tall in the front but only one level high in the back. Even in the second floor classrooms, the view outside looks upward, much like being in a valley ringed by woods.

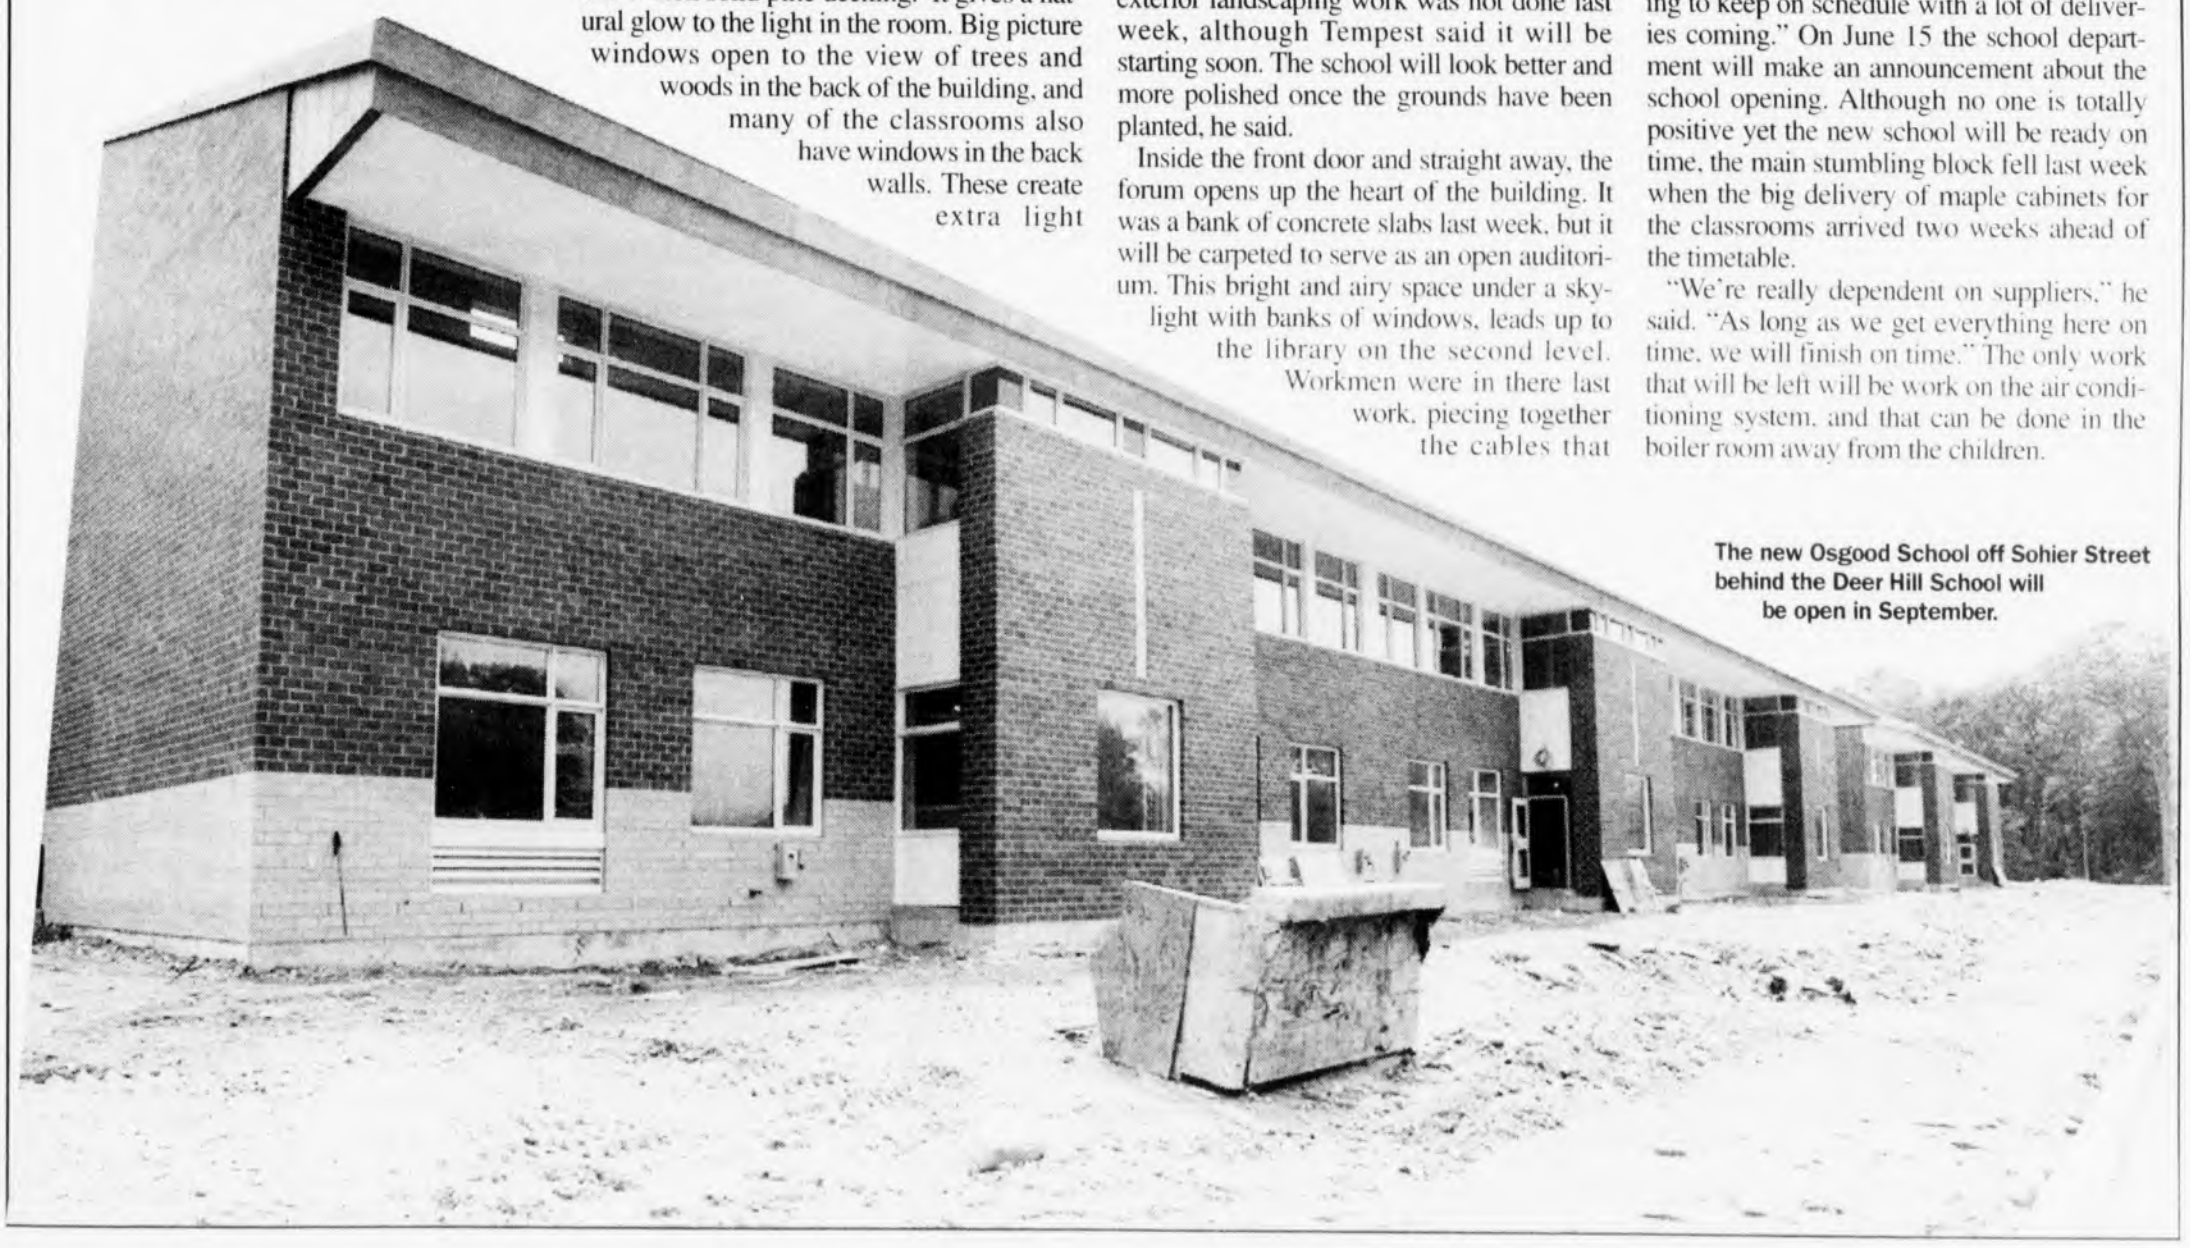
Nonetheless, the new Osgood School takes up 66,231 square feet, and it is hard to take in at a glance. Sections of the building jut out from the facade. These "bump outs" are mud rooms or activity rooms connected to the kindergarten classrooms, Tempest said. The school will have four kindergarten rooms on the first floor plus space for two collaborative kindergartens. Upstairs, there are 18 classrooms running off the "spine of the building," the three central corridors.

In the interior design, the architect has used the landscape to advantage. The classroom ceilings slope, and sections are made of wood, in a pattern made of laminated lumber and 3-inch solid pine decking. It gives a natural glow to the light in the room. Big picture windows open to the view of trees and woods in the back of the building, and many of the classrooms also have windows in the back walls. These create extra light and airiness.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

A school construction worker enters the new building for his shift.

The classroom entrances in the corridor have a similar feature. Most of these have been painted cream to accentuate the lightness. They each have an open foyer with a wood roof and a window to spill a pool of light at each end of the corridor.



The ground was still cut open since the exterior landscaping work was not done last week, although Tempest said it will be starting soon. The school will look better and more polished once the grounds have been planted, he said.

Inside the front door and straight away, the forum opens up the heart of the building. It was a bank of concrete slabs last week, but it will be carpeted to serve as an open auditorium. This bright and airy space under a skylight with banks of windows, leads up to the library on the second level. Workmen were in there last work, piecing together the cables that will connect the media center to the rest if the school with state of the art technology.

Much is left to do. Punch lists have to be reviewed. But Tempest said Wednesday unless there is a strike of delivery truck drivers, he predicts the Osgood will be ready on the first day of school.

"We're on schedule," he said. "We're fighting to keep on schedule with a lot of deliveries coming." On June 15 the school department will make an announcement about the school opening. Although no one is totally positive yet the new school will be ready on time, the main stumbling block fell last week when the big delivery of maple cabinets for the classrooms arrived two weeks ahead of the timetable.

"We're really dependent on suppliers," he said. "As long as we get everything here on time, we will finish on time." The only work that will be left will be work on the air conditioning system, and that can be done in the boiler room away from the children.

The new Osgood School off Sohier Street behind the Deer Hill School will be open in September.

Quonset huts to be razed

local residents are planning a small, outdoors, non-alcoholic champagne celebration when the Quonset huts finally tumble to the ground.

"On the day they bring in the wrecking ball, the neighbors are going to toast with non-alcoholic champagne as the huts crash to the ground," Cahill said. "I'm just ecstatic that they're about to be torn down. Of course, as with all things involving developers, I'll believe the huts are coming down when I see it happen."

The seller of the huts was listed as the Gulph Realty Trust. The property was listed for $625,000 and sold for $575,000 to Hingham builder John Murphy. The project will have to go back before the zoning board on July 6 because of some minor changes in the plan proposed by Murphy.

"Mr. Murphy has got a long reputation as a builder in the community. He bought five lots, and made some detail changes to the facade. His plans are beautiful, and I am hopeful that it will be a routine matter before the zoning board."

NOEL COLLINS
COHASSET DEVELOPER

"Mr. Murphy has got a long reputation as a builder in the community," Collins said. "He bought five lots, and made some detail changes to the facade. His plans are beautiful, and I am hopeful that it will be a routine matter before the zoning board."

For years, neighbors have complained that the huts — a pre-existing, non-conforming use in that neighborhood — have been the site of noisy and dangerous businesses. Zoning regulations allowed owners to operate most any kind of business out of the location. Until recently, Collins maintained a law office at the site and rented space to six tenants. He has since moved to a location on Scituate Hill.

Collins bought the 54,000 sq. ft. lot in 1996 planning to convert it from a commercial site to residential condominiums. The property is a non-conforming use, zoned for commercial use in the residential neighborhood. Because the buildings pre-date zoning regulations, the property had to be "grandfathered" and allowed to remain a commercial use. Collins' plan initially got bogged down by disagreements with the zoning board over how many units would be acceptable on the site. A strict interpretation of zoning bylaws would have limited the property to one house. Collins wanted 10 townhouses. The zoning board wanted four.

Last November, the zoning board reached a settlement with Collins and approved his plan to raze the Quonset huts and build five condominiums in three buildings on the site. Collins submitted plans to the zoning board to tear down all the structures and construct five condominiums in three buildings: two with two units and one single-unit.

The homes will be New England style colonials in the $350,000 to $400,000 range. There will be two double units, with two of the doubles on 1,240-square-foot footprints, and the others on a 1,120-square-foot footprint and a 1,050-square-foot footprint. The single unit will be on a 1,120-square-foot footprint. each townhouse will be a 2,400-square-foot unit.

The three buildings will occupy an area that is 10 percent smaller than the Quonset huts, preserving some open space. Each building will have clapboards, peaked roofs, porches, brick chimneys, shutters, three floors with garages on the first level and architecture consistent with the neighborhood.

Social Service League names new officers

The Social Service League of Cohasset held its annual meeting and luncheon May 11 at Walton Rodgers' Hall, St. Stephen's Church. Outgoing president Jane Russell announced the new officers and board of directors: president, Motoko Deane; vice president, Regina Schultz; treasurer, Kyle Lubitz; assistant treasurer, Denise Desmond; secretary, Carol Riley; personnel, Mary Hartwell.

Named to the board of directors were Jeff Steele (meals chair), Merle Graham (nursing chair), Margie Steele and Jane Russell (family service co-chairs), Annette Sawchuk, Peg Tis, Eleanor Smith, Lynne Layman, Peg Schroeder, Gail Stevens, Barbara Cook, Lillian Ketchum, Betty O'Sullivan, Sydney Peterson, Sue Reardon, Blanche Whitman, Marilyn McCunney and Moira Stansell.

Annual reports were delivered by Patricia Carleton, LICSW; public health nurse, Judy Fitzsimmons, R.N.; and consignment shop manager, Andrea Merrill.

The Cohasset High School Chorus, under the direction of Bryan Marks, performed a first-class musical program to an enthralled audience. Highlights were numbers from the Broadway musical, "Into the Woods," as well as several toe-tapping "swing" pieces.

The musical presentation was followed by a buffet luncheon for about 90 Social Service League Consignment Shop, Meals-on-Wheels volunteers and members of the community.

Scituate selectmen call regional train 'summit'

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Scituate selectmen are calling for a "summit" with town officials in neighboring Cohasset and Hingham to discuss issues relating to the restoration of the MBTA's Greenbush commuter rail line. The meeting will be scheduled for July.

The recent reports issued by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the town of Cohasset evaluating the MBTA's environmental impact report — and finding inaccuracies in it — prompted selectman Joseph Norton to call for the summit. The MBTA plans to build a 17.7-mile rail line to South Shore, which would end in Scituate with a train layover facility. Train service is scheduled to begin in 2002.

"Recently it has become public knowledge what many of us expected all along. The figures given to us by the MBTA are at best flawed," said Norton.

Norton cited an example in which the MBTA used a formula to measure the level of noise from passing trains by spreading the sound out over a 24-hour period.

"We all know that's a completely different noise. You can't hear it," he said. "It's the type of thing we've been spoon fed for years."

Norton said he hopes the summit will provide the three towns' officials with an opportunity to finally discuss the noise, vibration and pollution issues that will directly affect all of them and then approach the MBTA with their mutual concerns.

"Cohasset and Hingham are falling in line and questioning the MBTA's validity," he said. "The noise in Cohasset is the same noise that will be in Scituate and the same noise in Hingham."

Members of the board supported meeting with Cohasset and Hingham on the issue.

"I think it's about time," said selectman Ralph Crossen. "The voice of a summit could have a major impact."

"The voice of a summit could have a major impact."

— SCITUATE SELECTMAN RALPH CROSSEN.

Crossen said the MBTA has given unacceptable answers to the town's questions for years. He said that when he asked the MBTA about the increase in pollution levels to Scituate as a result of the train project, he was told by an official, "You have more trees."

"I can't think of one instance where (the MBTA) was helpful on an issue," Crossen said.

Selectmen Chairman Susan Phippen agreed that it's time for a summit, noting that the conclusions drawn in Cohasset's mitigation report were similar to those in Scituate's mitigation report.

"The Army Corps is asking the very questions that need to be answered," she added.

In its report the Corps questioned the ridership figures furnished by the MBTA.

"Without the ridership to sustain this, it shouldn't be a go," Phippen said.

Norton said the point of the rail summit goes beyond whether officials are for or against restoring commuter rail to the area.

"It's what you think is good for the town of Scituate," he said.

Norton cited the MBTA's prediction that the rail line will remove 2 percent of the cars commuting on the highway.

"You'll never notice it," he said.

But Scituate will be saddled with a 1,500-space parking lot to accommodate commuters from the towns of Marshfield, Norwell and Duxbury, Norton said.

"(The project) may good for other towns, but we live in Scituate. It's not a win-win situation for us. It's a big, big hit," he said. "From a regional point of view, it's wonderful. But for Scituate, it's a disaster."

Village Farmers' Market open Thursdays

The Cohasset Village Farmers' Market will run every Thursday through Oct. 15, from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. The market once again takes place on Cohasset Common at the corner of South Main Street and Robert E. Jason Road in Cohasset Village.

The market sponsors different activities for families to enjoy including live folk music, cooking demonstrations, children's face painting, occasional pony rides and much more. Musicians and entertainers looking for free exposure are welcome.

The Cohasset Chamber is a sponsor of the Farmers' Market in its continuing effort to revitalize the Cohasset Village business district. The chamber invites all to the market and enjoy the fresh fruits, vegetables, herbs, plants, baked goods, jams and jellies, lobsters, fresh and dried flower bouquets, breads and much more. Set aside enough time to enjoy the music and visit the many shops throughout Cohasset Village and Harbor. PLUMBING MUSINGS

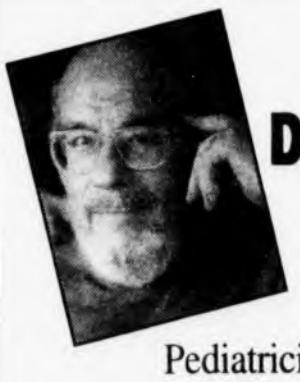
IMPERFECT PRIVY



Insurance Companies are generally good payers; so we jump at the chance to repair houses that have been fire damaged or water soaked if some insurance company is going to pay. The repair jobs are usually not difficult, and top of the line fixtures are put back in place of damaged ones, so we can make money on those, too.

One call on an insurance claim involved such a strange series of events that I still find it difficult to believe. The house involved in the accident was located in the Minot Beach area. The house was one of the balloon frame variety that were so commonly constructed in the 1920s. This type of construction allowed for a half bath to be installed on the outside wall on the first floor. The toilet would face the lavatory and a large window was beside the toilet. The accident occurred when a gas leak developed in the main pipe leading from the street to the house. The gas spread through the sand eventually filling up the sewage system and the septic tank. From there the gas pushed its way up the plumbing pipes, eventually reaching the first floor toilet. Old Mr. Murphy was sitting peacefully on his throne, reading his morning paper and smoking a cigarette. He tossed the butt into the toilet bowl, and it ignited the escaped gas. He was blown through the side window and on to the wrap around porch outside. Miraculously, he was not seriously injured, although his hearing was severely damaged. He did, however, change his smoking habits.

High tried the new system for the first time this school year, and parents, students and staff were quizzed about their experiences. In the principal's view, the results did not show much. Only 55 of the 260 surveyed returned the questionnaire.

"I had very little totally negative feedback," Collins said. "It was a whole lot of nothing either way." If the response meant anything, it appeared most parents were "taking a wait and see attitude" about the block. Overall, he felt the survey showed most people had faith the school knows what it is doing. The principal is now putting together a task force to find ways to improve the new system which he agreed is not perfect.

The debate heated up after parent Gary Vanderweil listed his doubts about the new regimen in an April letter to parents and school officials. Vanderweil also spoke at the May school board meeting and restated his view the school administration had not "done due diligence" before it began the block scheduling experiment.

However, the school board appeared to see a different picture in the survey numbers. The committee also heard last month from parents and teachers on both sides of the argument over the block. The debate heated up after parent Gary Vanderweil listed his doubts about the new regimen in an April letter to parents and school officials. His letter urged the community to undertake a study of the block schedule method and the alternatives. Vanderweil also spoke at the May school board meeting and restated his view the school administration had not "done due diligence" before it began the block scheduling experiment. He said math and science got shortchanged in the new system.

Collins answered some of the Vanderweil charges. But school board member Joseph McElroy chided the principal for putting gusto into his talk. He said the arguments the principal marshaled appeared to "bury" Vanderweil. With 20 percent or more people "on the negative side" on a variety of questions about the block, the numbers worried McElroy and Chairman Rick Shea.

"Clearly this survey indicates 25 to 40 percent of either students or parents felt they had an issue," Shea said. School board member Kathy Ofsthun also questioned why one-third of teachers said they could not cover the curriculum.

Collins on benefits of the block

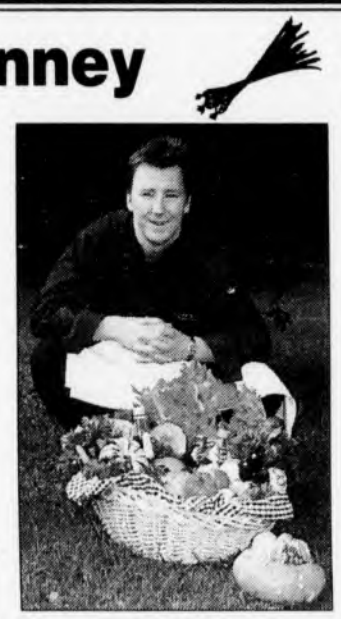
According to CHS Principal Curtis Collins, the block schedule "does nothing by itself" but is a tool that allows educators to attack some common problems in the schools such as teachers who talk and lecture too much. The 90-minute class time exposes their weaknesses. Ideally, it forces them to improve.

The school day schedule has became an issue because it shows "the values of a school" in a list of the courses offered and the amount of time spent on each. Some courses do not require as much instructional time as others, and there is no good reason why all courses should be the same length.

Admittedly, these are relatively new ideas, and Collins said the schools might have gotten out too far ahead of the public on the issues of school restructuring. But Education Reform has been driving the administration to make changes.

"We're certainly being pressured by the Department of Education," he said.

Collins said Cohasset had adopted the four-by-four block. In that model, students take four courses in a term, and each of their classes lasts 90 minutes. There are other variations on block schedules, but the four-by-four model has proved effective. Collins said the school department did complete a long-term study before it started the block.



National debate over block scheduling

A national debate over block scheduling has spawned over 8,000 Internet pages, chock full of information and arguments for and against block scheduling. The language is seldom restrained. Here are some samples.

"I was a teacher in the Charlotte/Mecklenburg School System for nine years teaching Social Studies and coaching at a very progressive school... Our school began to discuss changing our schedule to the block... The change was one of the best experiences that happened in my teaching career. Our school experienced the following: An increase of students on the A and B honor roll; A decrease in the number of F's. A decrease in the number of both in school and out of school suspensions."— David H. Vawter.

"Where DO we get this unlimited supply of otherwise intelligent educators who are willing to try whatever unproven schoolhouse fad comes down the road? Why can't we find even one well-designed, peer-reviewed, longitudinal study showing that in the long run Block Scheduling actually helps academic performance?"—Jon Brooker of Merritt Island, Florida.

Town meeting funds needed for third history book

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The committee on town history has reached an agreement with Town Manager Mark Haddad for a $76,000 budget over the next three years to publish the third volume of Cohasset's Town History. Haddad will place an article on the 1998 special town meeting warrant asking for $30,000 to continue work on the book. The committee will also need $30,000 more in October 1999 and about $6,000 in 2000.

The chairman of the committee on town history, Wigmore A. Pierson, said that much of the money provided by the town for the project will be returned to the local tax coffers.

"A significant percentage of the cost of publishing the book will be returned from sales of the third volume," Pierson said. "Every dollar we get will be returned."

Pierson said the exact cost of the book has not yet been determined, but he expects it the price to be in the mid-to-upper $20 range. In a letter to Haddad, Pierson thanked him for supporting the project.

The third volume will cover the years 1950 to the present. The "present" will actually be the year 2000, when the book is completed.

"Your enthusiastic and unequivocal support for this project and its budget is most appreciated and will certainly earn you a place in recorded history," Pierson wrote.

Pierson said he was very excited about the project, which was moving ahead on schedule. The third volume is expected to be published by the fourth quarter of 2000.

Recently, the committee chose Jacqueline Dormitzer to write the latest chapter in Cohasset's ongoing series of history books. The third volume will cover the years 1950 to the present. The "present" will actually be the year 2000, when the book is completed.

Pierson is also requesting that any residents with local photos from the last 50 years to consider contributing the pictures for the project. Anyone who would like to donate photos can contact Pierson at 383-6940. The committee's next meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, June 17 at the Lothrop House. Members of the public are invited to attend and come in and talk to committee members.

A great recipe for your first fish catch

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Many people are marking the days until the official opening of "the Striper Season" — mouths are watering in anticipation! Is there anything better than a straight-from-the-ocean fish? Try this recipe for your first catch, it's a real winner!

Although the preparation involves a good deal of slicing and chopping, when you are finished, you have a complete meal and needn't fuss with side dishes! All the flavors enhance each other but each remains distinct!

Olive oil

1 striped bass, weighing about 6 pounds juice of 2 lemons

salt and pepper

3 large onions, sliced thin

1 cup chopped parsley

2 green peppers, seeded and sliced thin

6 medium "boiling" potatoes, peeled and sliced paper thin

3 ripe tomatoes, sliced thin

Oil a shallow Pyrex or earthenware dish large enough to hold the fish. The fish should be cleaned with the backbone removed, but not split. The head may be cut off if you prefer. Wash the fish, dry it and rub inside and out with lemon juice and salt. Lay about 1/3 of the onions and 3 tablespoons of parsley in the fish's cavity. Saute the remaining onions and sliced green peppers until softened. Arrange potato slices on bottom of the baking dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper. Lay the fish on top of the potatoes and cover all with the sautéed onions and green peppers. Drizzle olive oil over the fish and veggies. Cover with a double thickness of foil and bake 40 mins. in a 400 degree oven. Uncover, baste with pan juices and arrange the sliced tomatoes over the top. Drizzle with oil and continue baking, uncovered for another 20 mins. Sprinkle with remaining parsley and serve in the baking dish. A good Aioli is a "must" with this fish!

Sauce Aioli

1 crustless slice of day-old bread (white)

3 Tbsp wine vinegar

4-6 cloves garlic, roughly chopped

1 egg yolk

pinch of salt

1 to 1-1/2 cups tepid olive oil

2 Tbsp lemon juice

3 Tbsp boiling water

Soak the bread in the vinegar about 10 minutes. Remove and squeeze dry. Put the garlic and bread into a mortar and pound with pestle until it is a smooth paste. Beat in the egg yolk and salt. When the mixture is thick and sticky, start adding the oil by droplets and when about 1/3 of it is used, you can pour a little faster and use a wire whisk to complete the beating. Add some lemon juice when the mixture becomes very heavy. Continue thinning with the boiling water as necessary. Aioli should be about the consistency of sour cream. (Aioli can be approximated by pounding the garlic to a smooth paste and adding it to 1-1/2 cups store-bought mayonnaise, but it won't be quite as good.) You may also use this sauce as a dip, surrounded by fresh raw summer vegetables..

Shop the village

The Village Renaissance Committee was the first to recognize a little creative touch here and there can go a long way. The grass-roots volunteer group, which started about 10 years ago, has added special enhancements to the village. The committee's major projects include building the town pump in front of Cohasset Hardware, developing the James Brook Walkway between the parking lot and South Main Street and orchestrating the creation of Shipcove Park, the "pocket park" next to Tedeschi's.

This was all in an effort to make the village a more attractive place to visit and shop.

Then about two years ago a handful of shop owners and interested citizens sat in French Memories to brainstorm about what else could be done to improve Cohasset Village.

Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, organized the meeting during which the ideas presented were all over the map.

Soon afterwards, however, a clear vision came into focus. The Village Revitalization Committee made up of local businesses and citizens was born and proved to be the impetus behind selectmen establishing the Village Task Force about 18 months later. The task force is a governmental entity with businesses having a seat at the table. Both groups have the common goal of turning Cohasset Village into a real gem.

Like a piece of silver that badly needs polishing — the potential has always been there: quaint, historical setting in small-town, Norman Rockwell America.

In the months that followed the French Memories meeting, the Chamber conducted a "charrette" — a village design session — which could lay the ground work for a master plan for the entire village area.

The Village Farmers' Market has evolved into a rite of spring which continues throughout the summer and into the fall.

And Mr. Rizzo and others have labored behind the scenes applying for grants. A $5,000 coastal access grant will set the stage for improved access between the harbor and village. An expected $165,000 state grant will pay for a new sidewalk along South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church And another exciting grant proposal seeks $60,000 to "link" Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Hull with improved transportation, signage and marketing to encourage people to travel between the four business districts.

Then, there's the anticipated reopening of the former Chart House restaurant at the harbor and the Red Lion Inn renovation project which, when completed, will be a real draw to the village.

We urge the selectmen to sell the unattractive, worn-looking Independence Building once the teen center vacates it. With a good dose of "TLC" the old structure could be transformed into an appealing shop and offices, adding spark to that part of South Main Street.

However, the most important element of all in the future of the village is a simple one: we must support our local merchants.

No matter how pretty the village becomes, it won't work if we don't shop there. So next time you need a gift, a meal, a bottle of wine, some flowers, gasoline or a nut or bolt — consider going downtown.

We can all agree that Cohasset Village is an important part of life in this town. But the village is made up of a host of small businesses which depend on your support for their very survival.

Celebrating Bourke's life

DEAR COHASSET FRIENDS,

How do you thank a town?

Your kindness, compassion and generosity surpassed anything I have ever experienced.

You celebrated the life of our beloved Bourke by telling us what a treasure he was to all he touched.

One young man remembered Bourke and said "He taught me how to be tall..." To live life large. To the class of '98 I remember John Lennon's words "before you cross the street, take my hand, life is what happens when you're making plans" (Beautiful Boy). You all took the hand of our Beautiful Bourke.

Rotary Club support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset Youth Resources would like to thank the Rotary Club of Cohasset for sponsoring a delicious Pancake Breakfast at Harborfest. Proceeds went to Cohasset teen projects and activities. Don Harrold, Ken Roth and many Rotarians were both master cooks on the grills and terrific hosts. (Mr. Harrold, how many pancakes did you flip that Saturday morning?) Pancakes were consumed by all ages and especially enjoyed by the Osgood Kids who were also celebrating the closing of their school. The Pancake Breakfast was truly enjoyed by the entire community.

Cohasset Youth Resources would also like to thank those who bought an ad for the placemats, as well as Peter Collins and his son, Pete, for assembling the speedball net in high winds, Michael Peraino for once again donating a radar gun to clock ball speeds, and Ted Carroll, Mike Peraino and Brad Potollichio for manning the speedball throw booth. Also, a heartfelt thank you to all teens and their parents for helping with this fund-raiser for the past three years. Without their commitment and support, and the interest and financial support of community organizations such as the Cohasset Rotary Club, the teens would not have a safe, drug-free center of their own.

It's time to stick your head out the window and yell

MY VIEW

DAVID T. HANNAN

Remember the character Howard Beale, the news anchor in the movie "Network"? he implored his viewers: "I want you to go to the window, open it, stick your head out and yell: 'I'm mad as hell, and I'm not going to take this anymore!' "

My window is open, my head is out, and I want you to join me.

It must have seemed like a good idea to somebody: balance the federal budget by cutting Medicare spending. But the $115 billion in Medicare cuts contained in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 are just plain stupid. The cuts actually cost more than they save. And then there is the more important cost: the government is trying to balance the budget on the backs of our nation's most frail and vulnerable — our sick, elderly, and disabled as well as those who care for them.

The devastating impact of the Balanced Budget Act on health care — particularly home care — is just starting to be felt across the Commonwealth. In Massachusetts, home health care is essential. Without it, thousands of frail, ill, and injured people might not get help or would have to leave their homes for much more expensive options, including nursing home care. And yet, the federal government will spend $100 million less on home health care this year in Massachusetts by cutting visits to the homes of the sick and dying.

Let's look at the devastating effect of the new Medicare reimbursement mechanism — called the Interim Payment System (IPS) — on just one home health agency, South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, part of the health care organization that I head. We will see an annual reduction in reimbursements of at least $4 million on a $20 million base. It has resulted in the elimination of 120 positions, which affected 50 nurses and support personnel. And we're not alone. Home health providers everywhere are struggling to meet the demands of the sick without adequate resources.

What do Medicare cuts mean for you, your family, and your businesses? It's likely that sick patients, after leaving the hospital, will either have to do without home health services — or will receive fewer visits. Family members will have to pitch in to continue patient care for days, weeks, months, or perhaps years after Medicare benefits run out.

What do Medicare cuts mean for you, your family, and your businesses? It's likely that sick patients, after leaving the hospital, will either have to do without home health services — or will receive fewer visits. Family members will have to pitch in to continue patient care for days, weeks, months, or perhaps years after Medicare benefits run out.

One of the most devastating impacts is the increased likelihood that frail seniors living alone and people with chronic health conditions will be admitted to nursing homes. Some skeptics think that this is deliberate by federal planners since Medicaid kicks in when personal assets are depleted, and half of Medicaid is paid for by the states. Home health care costs a fraction of skilled nursing home care, and generally produces better health outcomes. As a result, IPS may well end up costing taxpayers more, not less, as patients are forced to choose more expensive health care options.

On Monday, May 11, the Massachusetts Legislature got a first-hand look at what home care providers have been staring in the face since late last year. US Rep. James McGovern, D-Worcester, explained his proposal, a bill that would help mitigate the devastating impact of IPS. The proposed legislation, which every member of the Massachusetts congressional delegation has signed, would delay implementation of the reduced Medicare per-beneficiary limit to October, 1998 and use a more reasonable formula to calculate reimbursement. Rep. McGovern and all our Massachusetts members of Congress deserve thanks for trying to be part of the solution.

During a period sustained growth in the nation's economy and an apparent Federal budget surplus, we should invest more in health care and retirement security for our seniors — not less. Home care helps Massachusetts seniors live in their own homes for as long as possible. Slashing Medicare benefits will limit the independence enjoyed by thousands of people throughout the Commonwealth.

And so that's why it is time for all of us to speak out for commonsense. A balanced federal budget is a good idea but only if it is done right. Tell our elected representatives and the Clinton administration that you want them to show leadership on this issue. Tell them to reduce their obsession with Monica Lewinsky and Webster Hubbell, and to refocus energies on a more important issue — protecting our senior citizens from the unraveling of the safety net of home care that makes both human and financial sense.

David T. Hannan, a Hingham resident, is the president and chief executive officer of South Shore Hospital.

Viagra, an elixir for our senior citizens

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I don't think we have realized the full potential of this Viagra pill that promises to turn our seniorest citizens into reasonable facsimilies of Wilt Chamberlain and Bill Clinton.

Already the fun palaces of Nevada, where such goings on are legal, have noted an increase in customers, most of them in the 66 to 96 age group, some of them in wheelchairs.

A handicapped accessible brothel. Is that PC or what? But I digress . . .

"It has really done a lot to them physically, mentally and emotionally," said a working girl at the Moonlight Bunny Ranch. "They are paying more, staying longer. It totally has changed their self-esteem."

"It was a long night last night," another weary toiler at the Moonlight Bunny Ranch told the Associated Press. "But this is the best thing that's happened since prostitution was legalized in 1970."

Half a world away, already there is a black market in the little blue pill, which goes for $100 a pill in Kuwait and up to $800 a bottle in Turkey. The pill costs $10 per in the United States, where it was released to the eager public in March.

San Marino and Andorra, two fly specks on the map of Europe usually known only to stamp collectors, have experienced small but intense tourist booms as aging lotharios from France, Italy and Spain line up at the fountain of youth.

Italy hasn't made up its mind about Viagra yet and the national health system in Spain will pay for the drug only if doctors find "a condition that needs to be cured," whatever that means.

The final returns aren't in yet, but think of what Viagra is going to do to the folks who take sex polls.

Like the researchers at Bentley College in Waltham who studied 160 swimmers ages 40 to 80, compared the results to a less active group and found higher levels of sexual activity among the swimmers.

Nearly all of them, men and women alike, said they had sex at least once a week. They enjoy it more, too, at least that is what they said. And, says Professor Phillip Whitten, they socialize with younger people.

Or the team from Johns Hopkins University that found the old wives' tale that sex can leave you blind has some basis in fact. Five patients, ages 24 to 53, reported that they had blurred vision during or shortly after sex activity.

The Institute for the Advanced Study of Human Sexuality in San Francisco found that sexual activity is as good as aspirin or Tylenol when it comes to dealing with pain. Has anyone ever gotten a headache after sex? (See below)

It's probably too late now if you're a member of Mensa, but high school graduates average 59 sex acts a year while those who have been to graduate school average only 52.

The National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago also found that about one in five adults didn't have sex at all during the previous year — before Viagra, that is.

Dr. Ananias Diokno of Washtenaw County, Mich., surveyed 744 of his neighbors and found that 62 per cent of married women who drank one cup of coffee a day were sexually active but only 36 per cent of the men.

The Diamond Headache Clinic in Chicago turned up the alarming statistic that more men than women are likely to say, "Sorry, honey, I have a headache."

And then we discovered Viagra.

Sewer commission clarifies meeting stance

TO MARK HADDAD, TOWN MANAGER

Confirming our phone conversation at mid-morning June 17, and with all due respect, neither the sewer commissioners nor their engineer will attend the meeting for the following reasons:

• Over the past three years the commissioners have held more than 15 public meetings in the town hall auditorium. In addition, we have held regular meetings on a more or less monthly basis for an approximate total of 45 to 50 public meetings in the three-year span. Clearly, no useful purpose would be served by yet another meeting.

• Judging from post meeting commentary, our most recent public meeting (6/4/98) was successful in clearing up the confusion on payment methods for the North Cohasset project. Having another meeting so close on the heels of the June 4 meeting will enhance the probability of reintroducing confusion which we would like to avoid. Our next regular meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, June 30. Anyone who has questions, including selectmen, may ask them at that time.

• As I told you, the sewer commissioners do intend to hold another large public meeting in late September or early October. The purpose of this meeting will be to discuss the sewer warrant articles in the October STM. At that time, we expect to update the brochure distributed at our June 4 public meeting. In the updated brochure, we shall incorporate the actual low bid price received from our late August tenders so that Option One will be based on firm figures. In addition, the sewer commission intends to issue an informational pamphlet to future users in the North Cohasset system shortly after the solicitation of bids. This brochure will outline project specifics, how the system works, what components will be on private properties, owner responsibilities, electrical needs, board of health coordination and future system operation and maintenance concerns to reiterate the answers to those questions most frequently asked.

• Further on the question of public information concerning the sewer projects, you, of course, are fully aware that these projects have had ongoing, exhaustive coverage in all three of our local newspapers.

Finally, we realize that there are some people who have ignored our past public information efforts and only now are taking an interest, some very vocally. Recent misinformation being circulated has further aggravated the situation to such an extent that some people don't know if things have changed or what they should believe. The selectmen and the board of health should not be burdened with these issues. We have no problem answering their questions; however, to document the individuals and their concerns, all we ask is that the individuals put their questions in writing and address them to the sewer commission so that we can provide an adequate response.

EDWARD M. GUILD
CHAIRMAN
SEWER COMMISSION

Editor's note: The joint meeting with the sewer commission, health board and selectmen slated for tonight has been canceled.

Deadline for community copy

The deadline for submitting community copy for the Cohasset Mariner is 8 a.m., Friday for the following week's issue. Letters and obituaries will be accepted until noon, Tuesday. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St. or sent by fax to 741-2931. Call Mary Ford at 741-2933 with questions.

Sewer board sues for control of contracts

overlapping jurisdiction, and money, and issues about the chief executive officer.

"There is some overlap of authority between some town boards and the board of selectmen. I think the issue has to go before town meeting. The town manager act was done through a citizen's initiative, and there is still some overlapping authority that needs to be worked out. As an example, the town manager was initially given control over some housing authority units which are actually under the state's control," she added.

Lisa Bumstead, spokesperson for Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions — a grass-roots organization searching for sewer solutions fair to the whole town — said the suit shows just how out of touch the sewer commissioners have become.

"The lawsuit is an embarrassment to the town," Bumstead said. "However, the more ridiculous this commission behaves, the more it more it validates the claims of citizens throughout town that this board has been out of control for a long time. This behavior is an indication of the need for selectmen to take an even more aggressive stance with this board. It definitely is going to be interesting."

Despite these objections, the sewer commissioners believe they are preserving their rights as set forth by the state Legislature, and hope for a quick resolution in their favor.

"Although the sewer commissioners find themselves in an adversarial position from a legal standpoint, there is no personal animosity whatsoever," Guild said. "We need to have the legal question resolved in our favor if we are to continue to function. In other words, this is not a turf war over some minor matter. This entails a very important aspect of the duties, responsibilities and authority of the Cohasset Sewer Commission."

Town meeting approved the project at $6.6 million with the town paying 50 percent of the cost of the work. A request by the sewer commission at last March's town meeting to borrow more money got 60 percent of the vote, but failed to gain the two-thirds vote needed for passage. The request failed even though the homeowners connecting to the system would have borne the entire additional $2.7 million cost. Selectmen later decided to cancel contracts two, three and four, lump them together, and send them out for another round of bids hoping to lower the cost of the North Cohasset project.

However, the sewer commission wanted to continue with contract two because the $6.6 million was more than enough to complete the connections around Straits Pond. Guild said the selectmen and Haddad have done nothing less than to usurp the authority of the sewer commission to perform a key part of its job.

"I made a change order to contract one and Haddad went through the roof, although he approved the change because he felt it was right," Guild said. "A project changes as you go along. I had 10 previous changes to the contract, none of which needed the selectmen's approval."

But Haddad said he canceled contract two based on town meeting's rejection of additional funding and town counsel's opinion that he had the authority to award or cancel sewer contracts.

"I absolutely have not usurped their power," Haddad said. "I'm responsible for the day-to-day operations of the town, and I'm not in any power-play and I adamantly deny and disagree with any such assertions. I'm just carrying out my responsibilities as town manager."

"There is some overlap of authority between some town boards and the board of selectmen. I think the issue has to go before town meeting. The town manager act was done through a citizen's initiative, and there is still some overlapping authority that needs to be worked out."

SELECTMEN CHAIRMAN RONNIE MCMORRIS

Guild wrote a letter to selectmen stating his belief that the town manager did not have the right to award sewer contracts. Previously, Guild had asked the town to allow him to get a second opinion about DeRensis' reading of the Town Manager Act.

"Town counsel's legal opinion to the selectmen dated 4/24/98 makes it impossible for the sewer commission to discharge its duties and responsibilities as set forth in the special act of t he legislature that created the commission," Guild said.

Selectmen refused Guild's request for a second opinion and said they were satisfied with DeRensis' conclusions. The sewer commissioners acted on their own and got opinions from three former and current town counsels in other communities. Guild said all three attorneys disagreed with DeRensis' opinion and agreed that the sewer commission should award or cancel its own contracts. The sewer commissioners hired Marshfield Town Counsel Robert L. Marzelli to represent them in the suit against the selectmen and Haddad.

In his letter to selectmen, Guild stated that Haddad's contract awarding authority was restricted to items much smaller than sewer projects.

"Town counsel's primary basis for his opinion is that the town manager is authorized to award contracts for labor and materials (that is to say large contracts such as sewer projects) under the authority granted to him under the state procurement law which is generally referred to as '30B'," Guild said. "Actually, '30B' specifically is restricted to 'goods and services', namely the procurement of paper, pencils, office equipment, furniture and office spare parts, etc., etc. It does not cover contracting for labor and services."

Haddad was offended by Guild's assertion that he could only contract for office supplies.

"It's extremely insulting," Haddad said, angered by Guild's statements. "According to the sewer commission, it's my job to procure pens, pencils and paper."

Guild said stripping the sewer commission of its contract awarding authority is a serious conflict with its ability to establish a vision for the town's sewer system, and then to make that vision a reality.

"Our vision was compromised when they rejected contract two," Guild said. "If they take away our power to award contracts, then we become a board with no power as a sewer commission. They've left us without the power to implement a sewer program on a professional basis. Our hands are tied."

Haddad disagreed with Guild's assessment. He said it was quite feasible for the sewer commission to establish a vision for the town's sewer without awarding contracts.

"When town meeting rejected the request for $2.7 million, it was sending a clear message," Haddad said. "At that point, the vision for the sewers should have changed."

Haddad also refuted a claim by Guild that the lawsuit would not be costly for the town.

"Fortunately, for both parties this is not an expensive legal proceeding," Guild said. "Town counsel has already completed his legal work as set forth in his opinion dated April 24, 1998. The sewer commissioners agree with all the 'facts' as set forth in his opinion. Therefore, there will be no costly and time-consuming 'discovery' process."

Haddad said the lawsuit would cost the town money every time DeRensis had to work on the case.

"We have had to hire town counsel to defend us against this lawsuit at $120 an hour," Haddad said. "Currently, we have 20 days to respond to the lawsuit, and we have to pay $120 an hour for that response. When I asked town counsel to come in here Monday night, we paid him $120 an hour to be here."

Last classes leave old Osgood School

With cheers and tears, the last classes left the Ripley Road Joseph Osgood School Friday, June 19.

There were cheers of "we're free" as students meeting parents for rides home eagerly burst out through the front doors. Behind the school, bus loads of singing children pulled out as a line of teachers did the "wave cheer," some stopping to dab tears from their eyes.

Inside Osgood and in the kindergarten classrooms currently housed at the Deer Hill School, the scene was one of volunteer parents, trying to find just the right box for everything from bags of building blocks and books to flip charts and quart-sized bottle of paint.

School may have just ended for the students, but for these parents thoughts were of the next school year and the expected move to the new Osgood School.

Members of past Osgood classes were on hand for an end of school celebration. From the classes of '36 &'37 are Eunice Brownell, Mary Keating, Libby Pompeo, Arthur Lehr, Tilly Nardo and Pauline Keating.

"It's a big task to move a whole school and I'm so grateful to all the people who have helped already and who will be helping in August," said Osgood Principal Marilee Cantelmo. "You know the saying, 'It takes a village to raise a child;' well, it takes a village to move a whole school."

While the physical aspects of moving equipment, furniture and boxes will be handled by Burkhardt Bros., Inc., the remaining packing up of classrooms and the unpacking at the new Osgood School will be handled entirely by volunteers.

Volunteers are needed to assist with packing in early August and then with unpacking later that month. To volunteer, call Cassandra Rioux at 383-2856.

Town government gets refined

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Whatever the outcome of the lawsuit the sewer commission has initiated against the selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad, town officials are still working on previous plans to refine local government.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris pointed out that when selectmen articulated their goals for the coming year, establishing a centralized public works department ranked high on that list. This proposal has been in the works for more than six months and was not initiated in response to the sewer commission's lawsuit.

McMorris said towns that adopt town manager government usually eliminate many local boards in the process. She said that didn't happen in Cohasset because the Town Manager Act was driven by a citizen's petition and the government structure committee didn't study issues related to the elimination or consolidation of town boards. But areas where the selectmen's authority overlaps with the authority of other boards demonstrates a need to examine the need for some possible consolidation, McMorris said.

When we were talking about goals for the year, one of the goals that Mark had was to consolidate some of our public works projects," McMorris said. "It makes sense as he consolidates services."

Haddad is still working on a proposal that could bring the sewers, public water and public works together under the direction of a paid professional, probably an engineer. Haddad said he is studying Chelmsford as a model for Cohasset. He also pointed out that consolidating public works projects under one paid professional would not necessarily eliminate sewer commissions or water commissions. Chelmsford has all public works projects under one person's authority, yet still has a sewer commission. Haddad said the Chelmsford sewer commission will stay in place until the town finishes laying new sewer pipes, sometime in the next five or six years.

Haddad said his chief concern is to deal with the maintenance of public buildings. Last year, Haddad made a presentation to selectmen to make the remaining elected boards into appointed boards, except for the library trustees and the water commissioners. Now he is working on a presentation for this October's town meeting to consolidate public works under one paid professional.

Strawberry Parfait celebrates 20 years

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

On the news the price of ice cream is going up, the time seemed right to splurge at the Strawberry Parfait where most things have either stayed the same or improved with age. The village ice cream shop at 2 Pleasant St. will celebrate its 20th year this summer. According to owner Carmine Carlucci, Cohasset is a swell place to do business, the trade in ice cream scoops is good, and his best sellers are still chocolate and vanilla.

"Vanilla and chocolate outsell all the other flavors 7-to-1," he said. In a week, he sells 33 gallons of each. The store stocks 40 flavors in case someone with a taste for an ice cream adventure shows up, and ice cream is not the only commodity. The regular menu includes hot dogs, burgers, children's meals and baked stuffed seafood. Specials feature scampi, swordfish and boneless prime rib.

Carlucci, who calls Hingham home, bought the six-month old Strawberry Parfait in 1978 and decided to keep the name even though the business was not established when he took over. For the first two years, he ran it part-time opening up after school and for the summer. The original Strawberry Parfait sold ice cream, parfaits, and cold sandwiches. But Carlucci branched out with an off-season catering business and then developed a year-round menu around family style chicken, fried plates and Bar-B-Q.

There have been other changes. The indoor seating area is gone, replaced by an outdoor "dining room" banked with flowers. Unfortunately, this year will be the last for the strawberry vine mural on the wall facing the garden. It is going to make room for a new walk-in freezer. But the flower garden is growing. Carlucci plants it himself, working early in the mornings before customers arrive.

"We started putting out flowers. People enjoyed it, so we did more," he said. Mixed in with the marigolds, the geraniums and the petunias, he adds "conversation pieces" such as a tomato plant. He also has a putting green, though "no one ever uses it." With a view of St. Stephen's tower in the background, the garden makes an idyllic spot to eat out on a summer night. That is the staple of Carlucci's business.

"I serve an excellent home-cooked meal at a very reasonable price," he said. Though his typical customer comes from Cohasset, people travel to get lobster salad and ice cream from the Strawberry Parfait. Carlucci has also opened up after hours for celebrities. Bill Cosby arrived one Saturday morning with Clark Chatterton, the manager of the Music Circus concession. Cosby had a burger and fries on special order. (Carlucci had been loading up a truck with catering supplies when they arrived.) Another time, he opened the shop after the show for Donny and Marie. The Osmonds ordered the fried chicken. And though The Witches of Eastwick picked a different store to film a scene in the movie, Jack Nicholson and other stars turned up to eat at the Strawberry Parfait.

Carlucci allowed he has run out to get an autograph every now and then. But the best part about having a store in Cohasset has been watching the youngsters grow up. Some of the youngsters who have worked for him were customers when they were children. He is planning a special children's day July 12 to celebrate the 20th year. A husband and wife clown duo will be on hand, and there will be balloons, face painting and magic shows.

The Strawberry Parfait is located on Pleasant Street across from the South Shore Arts Center.

Rain puts a damper on start to Legion season

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The George H. Mealy Post 118 Legion baseball team was counting more than runs for the past couple of weeks.

The team was saying "How many days has it been since our last game?"

The bazillion gallons of rain that fell over the region lately has put the Legion team on the sidelines for 13 games as of Monday, according to coach Scott Arnold.

Before the biblical type rains started, the Scituate Post team was riding a 2-0 record, having defeated Randolph Post, 9-4, and Weymouth Post, 9-7. Pitcher Bill Fitzgerald of Scituate picked up the win against Randolph, while Ben Ketchum of Cohasset pitched all seven innings for the win over Weymouth.

Ketchum is a three-year veteran on the team, having joined in the team's first season following a 17-year layoff..

The team was saying "How many days has it been since our last game?" The bazillion gallons of rain that fell over the region lately has put the Legion team on the sidelines for 13 games as of Monday, according to coach Scott Arnold.

According to Arnold, the team is anchored by such veterans as Mike Conroy of Scituate in centerfield; Larry Flynn, also of Scituate at shortstop; Joe Pergola of Cohasset at first base and Greg Taylor, also of Cohasset at second base.

Recapping the first two games, coach Arnold stated, "The Randolph win was just basic baseball. The kids were getting in shape and played nice baseball. The big man

Cohasset sailors 'skippered' their way to a victorious season

The Cohasset sailing team proved again and again this season that Cohasset has produced some great sailors. Racing in the white division of the Massachusetts Bay Sailing League, they won their division championship, beating five other schools in a two-day tournament at the end of May. They also won four out of five individual meets during their regular sailing season, gaining them a trophy for second place, and they had impressive standings at the state championships as they competed with the best sailors from more than 20 schools.

Most races were held at Community Boating on the Charles River in Mercury and FJ sailboats. The 11-member team proved adept at sailing both kinds of boats, much to their credit because each boat requires different skills.

The sailing team, which had once been a powerhouse several years ago, had disbanded until it was revived last year. On this year's team were returning seniors Katie Buckley, Colin Pyfrom and Kyle Whiteley, and juniors Devin Buick and Hunt Pile. Newcomers this year were Andrew Ross, Ben Peterson, Melissa Pyfrom, Andrew McAuliffe and Tom Anderson.

Senior Andrew Ross was a true newcomer to sailing, having sailed only on a school-sponsored trip on a schooner in the Caribbean. However, he proved himself to be a capable crew, and he and Colin Pyfrom won several crucial races during the divisional tournament.

Although they often crewed this season, Andrew McAuliffe, Tom Anderson and Hunt Pile have also shown a tremendous ability to skipper boats to victory, and they will be heavily relied upon next year, as the team loses four seniors.

Sophomores Ben Peterson and Melissa Pyfrom proved time and again that they are skippers to watch next year. Both have a natural ability to get their boats moving right through the competition even when they have started the race at the 'back of the pack.'

Although they often crewed this season, Andrew McAuliffe, Tom Anderson and Hunt Pile have also shown a tremendous ability to skipper boats to victory, and they will be heavily relied upon next year, as the team loses four seniors.

Kyle Whiteley deserves special mention for his loyalty to the team. He is the only team member who was on the team before it disbanded, and couldn't wait to join when he learned it was reforming last year. However, due to special circumstances, he wasn't able to sail then, so he made sure he was first to sign up this year, and rarely missed a practice or meet.

With equal ability as a crew and skipper, Devin Buick will also be one to watch next year. His enthusiasm and interest in sailing ensure that he will continue to mature into an experienced and talented skipper.

Seniors Katie Buckley, Whitney Cook and Colin Pyfrom contributed tremendously to the success of the team during the last two years. All three sailed consistently and usually finished in the top three places. Whitney Cook hopes to sail on the University of Vermont team and Katie Buckley has aspirations to sail at Harvard University. Colin Pyfrom will be landlocked as he goes to flight school in the Midwest.

Five sailors deserve special recognition for their showing in the state championships held at MIT May 21 and 22. Whitney Cook and Ben Peterson alternately skippered during the two-day regatta, placing seventh out of 22 schools in their division. Also racing in another division were Katie Buckley and Colin Pyfrom on the first day, and Katie and Devin Buick the second day. The wind was gusty and unpredictable, but the Cohasset sailors did a great job dealing with the difficult weather conditions and proving that they are able to compete with some of the best sailors in the state.

The future of the sailing team is very bright with so many talented, capable sailors who can skipper and crew equally well. However, with four departing seniors, next spring they will be looking for a few more enthusiastic members for the team.

Cohasset residents are members of winning lacrosse team

Stephen Kovach and Adam Leahy, both of Cohasset, were members of the Brewster Academy 1998 Varsity Boys' Lacrosse team that compiled an overall 12 and 3 record.

Stephen, a junior midfielder who can face off, shoot from outside and play solid defense was a consistent performer as Brewster won its last 10 games of the season. Stephen was recently elected by his teammates as co-captain of the 1999 team. He is also a starting halfback on the varsity soccer team.

Adam, a freshman attack man, scored 14 goals with five assists as Brewster won its last 10 games of the season.

Brewster Academy is on the shores of Lake Winnipesaukee, N.H.

Rain puts a damper on Legion season for us in that game was Ben McGuiness of Scituate, who hit a bases-clearing triple to put the game away for us.

"The second game was a lot different. We just fell behind right from the start, and the kids came through playing great ball.

"We had to play catch-up and the kids came through with a six-run fifth inning and a three-run sixth inning to give us the win.

"That fifth inning was quite an inning for us. Everybody in the lineup came through with a hit. So far I like what I have seen. This is a fighting team. Even when they were down by seven points, the kids just kept fighting back."

As for the rainouts, the coach was not too happy about that.

"The rainouts are killing us. The kids need work to stay sharp, and we just keep getting rained out. We were looking for a big year this season, and we appeared to be well on our way.

"The team has been improving every year since I brought it back three years ago. In our first year, we won three out of 20 games. Last year we jumped up four wins, winning seven of the 20 games.

"This year, we are looking for double digit wins, thanks to a number of veterans back with the team and some good looking newcomers."

The Scituate team owes a lot to Arnold, who took it upon himself three years ago to bring the team back the team three years ago.

"I played Legion ball myself, and really enjoyed the game. I talked to a number of teenagers around town who were looking for something to do in the summer, and the though struck me to bring back Legion ball." Said Arnold.

"I found a number of kids who were interested and sent a letter to the league, telling them we would like to start up a team and join the league.

"During the first two years I had John Carr coaching with me, and John really helped to get the program rolling. This year Ralph Berry has taken over the assistant coach duties and Ralph is quite familiar with Legion ball, having duties and Ralph is quite familiar with Legion ball, having been a player in another town, just a short while ago. The post has been very cooperative with us, so we have had a lot of good people getting behind the team. It's hard to believe the post went 17 years without a team, but that has all been changed now, and everybody is quite happy about the rebirth of the team."

Besides being the coach of the team, Arnold is also the Post's director of athletics.

Now, all the team needs is some nice sunny days, or at least rain free.

FOR YOUR HEALTH

Alternative medicine – is it for you?

By Esther Csapo Rastegari, RN, EdM
CORRESPONDENT

Three thousand years ago, people didn't have ultrasound or MRIs (magnetic resonance imaging), but they did get sick and were at times in pain. In China, they might have sought out an acupuncturist, who relieved their pains and healed their ills. In India, they might have sought treatment with a practitioner of Ayurveda.

For as long as people have been in existence, there have also existed those who attempted to heal them, some with better success than others, using the knowledge of those who had healed before and relying on resources in the environment, such as plants. Folklore and classic literature alike remind us of this: When Juliet seeks out the help of the Friar, he is gathering medicinal herbs.

Herbology roots

Modern Western medicine is not that far from its roots in herbology. Modern pharmacology may produce uniform pills today, but those pills are often purified extracts of plants. It was through trial, error and common knowledge that this science developed. What about the use of leeches to suck a patient's blood? Or performing surgery without anesthesia?

Medicine as we know it today has changed considerably in the past 100 to 150 years, but that really isn't so much time in the greater scheme of things.

We consider the care we receive in a hospital today as conventional and label everything else as unconventional or alternative. Alternative is often used to denote those treatments utilized instead of conventional ones. Another term, complementary, has come to mean those treatments used while having conventional care as well, such as when acupuncture is used to relieve the side effects of chemotherapy for cancer. Perhaps all these labels contribute to controversy and impede the process of dealing with the problem – getting the patient better.

The term alternative was often used to describe those therapies not taught in medical schools. A recent survey of medical schools, however, found courses describing the benefits of relaxation techniques in handling stress! Clearly the lines between conventional and CAM (complementary and alternative medicine) are blurring.

In 1992, the National Institutes of Health (NIH) opened a division to fund and investigate several areas of CAM. This alone says a lot about the field. Medical centers around the country are currently researching the safety and efficacy of alternative therapies for such chronic health problems as asthma, HIV/AIDS, addictions, cancer, stroke, aging, allergies, heart disease and low back pain. At one of the centers, the University of Maryland, preliminary results are showing that acupuncture is effective in dealing with the symptoms of osteoarthritis.

Seek an alternative?

Should you seek out alternative medicine? That depends a great deal on what ails you. Western medicine is at its best when battling acute trauma, emergency situations. Surgery and medication have helped give millions of people back their lives. But, the success rate with chronic, long-term conditions is more limited. This is the area where alternative medicine is often very effective.

Alternative therapies can be very helpful in the following areas: disease prevention, stress reduction, and preventing and controlling the side effects of conventional medicines. We are learning a great deal about the tremendous impact stress has on our health. While stress may not be the cause of a particular disease, it usually exacerbates it. Physicians' training hasn't traditionally focused on ways to reduce stress. A NIH panel of doctors, nurses, epidemiologists and statisticians found strong research evidence that mind-body techniques such as meditation, relaxation, hypnosis and biofeedback were effective against the chronic pain associated with back pain, headaches and arthritis.

If you are in the throes of a serious asthma attack, don't waste time. Get emergency help. You may, however, want to consider CAM when it comes to prevention. But don't engage in this process alone. In a survey of family practice patients, 50 percent of them had sought alternative therapies, but only 53 percent informed their physicians. Patients will seek out care that they feel will be helpful, even when that means paying out of their pockets. Why not tell their doctors? Many people feel their physician will not be supportive of their decision. Some don't feel connected to their doctors. They look for a practitioner who will listen to them, and make them feel heard. It is the basis of trust.

Alternative therapies are sometimes referred to as holistic, as they tend to focus of the whole person – physical, emotional, psychological, spiritual. Recognition of the mind-body connection is intrinsic in their nature. Health is not seen as the absence of disease, but rather as the ability to resist disease. Alternative medicine practitioners engage their patients in caring for their health, thus empowering them. This makes patients feel better about the care they are receiving.

Ask questions

Physicians should be knowledgeable about alternative treatments that would benefit their patients, and be able to refer them to reputable practitioners. Good health care is a team effort. If your physician can't refer you to a CAM practitioner, what should you look for? Check with the national organization of the therapy. Many have Web sites, and provide practitioner directories. Check credentials. Ask him or her whether they are licensed or certified, and what kind of training they had to undergo. Do they annually participate in any form of continuing education? Ask friends and family for referrals, but check out qualifications nonetheless.

Alternative treatments are big business, and someone who has hung out a shingle may not have the training to back it up. Any reputable practitioner would welcome the opportunity to explain their training. Be sure to ask what benefits you can expect from treatment and how long before positive effects will be noticed. Ask about any risks associated with the treatment, or side effects of herbal remedies. If you are currently under medical care for a particular condition, check for any contraindications.

Vocabulary hindrance

It is often awkward to describe alternative therapies using conventional terminology. Western medicine does not yet have the vocabulary or the tools to quantify "life force," but that does not negate its existence. As a practitioner of therapeutic touch, I know it works, yet cannot fully explain how. Many years ago, I was with a friend as she was dying of cancer. While stopping breathing was the physical sign of her death, a change occurred in how she looked. She did not appear to be sleeping, for that which had made her alive, that life force, was gone. Her essence, her spirit, had ascended, leaving behind her body, that now appeared as the shell that had housed the spirit for so many years.

The human body is truly a marvel – physical, emotional, spiritual. With all science knows, it could not yet create a human being. Scientists are working to understand what already exists. Life continues, regardless of being understood.

Know what to expect

Since complementary and alternative therapies are often quite different from conventional care, knowing what to expect is important.

Acupuncture. Practitioners may be medical physicians with acupuncture training, or may be non-medical practitioners. The philosophy is that health is dependent on the unencumbered flow of vital energy, or chi/qi. When the energy flow is impeded, disease results. Treatment consists in part in opening up the channels of energy along pathways referred to as meridians. Hair-thin needles are inserted at specific points along these meridians. While patients feel the prick of the needles, the treatment is not uncomfortable or painful. Sometimes there may be a sense of tingling along the pathway. Make sure sterile, disposable, single-use needles are being used.

Acupuncture was also shown to reduce the need for surgery for carpal tunnel syndrome and osteoarthritis of the knee. Used in conjunction with conventional medical care, acupuncture was able to reduce the need for medication and shorten the length of stay in treatment facilities. It was also beneficial in treating substance abuse, and in increasing blood flow to the brain following stroke and spinal cord injuries. No significant side effects were noted. Hopefully, it will soon be a covered insurance cost. Some acupuncturists are trained in Traditional Oriental Medicine (TOM), and may combine herbal treatments together with acupuncture.

Acupressure relies on a similar philosophy, but uses pressure applied to these meridian points instead of needles. The above-mentioned NIH panel found acupuncture to be effective against the nausea of cancer chemotherapy, post-surgical anesthesia and pregnancy. It was also effective in treating pain.

Ayurveda. Developed thousands of years ago in India, Ayurveda was revived by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the founder of Transcendental Meditation. It was further popularized by Deepak Chopra, MD, trained in both conventional medicine and Ayurveda.

The philosophy focuses on body types, or prakriti. Certain body types are prone to particular diseases. Health is achieved through diet and exercise specific to the body type. Yoga exercises and herbal medicines are also used. Chopra's "Perfect Health" describes the system. Much can be done by the individual alone. There is a treatment center in Lancaster.

Manual, or hands-on treatments include chiropractic medicine, massage therapy, osteopathy, reflexology and therapeutic touch. The training of osteopaths is similar to that of medical physicians, with an emphasis on manipulation of the muscular-skeletal system to bring the body into balance. A reflexologist works on the feet, the philosophy being that points in the foot correspond to locations/organs in the body. By massaging these points, health is restored in the other parts of the body.

Therapeutic touch is a system developed by Dolores Krieger, a registered nurse and professor of nursing at New York University. It is based on the belief that there exists an energy field around the body. Practitioners use their hands to assess this energy field for imbalances, and then work to reestablish balance. When balance is restored, the body is able to rely on its own innate healing potential.

After having the traditional season-ending Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree rained out, the Cohasset junior lacrosse program finished its season June 19 with the Blue squad [illegible]tting the White 14-3.

Both teams were shorthanded due to Little League playoffs, and several of the White team's players switched sides to flesh out the Blue roster. Still, the White team had the better record and the moves should have made for a close game. Instead, it was a rout. Tim Pilczak scored two goals and Paul Digan added a goal and three assists as the Blue team jumped to a 6-0 lead that it never relinquished.

Pilczak finished with three goals and one assist, Digan two goals and three assists, Michael Hajjar two goals and an assist and Mark Davis, Robby Carpenter and Dewayne Morris two goals each for the Blue team. Garrett Curran, switching from the White team to play goaltender for the first time all season, made 12 saves in the Blue net.

Michael Rasmussen, as he has all season, led the White team in scoring, with two goals and an assist. Nick Murphy overcame a slow start to finish with 11 saves.

The teams played the game wearing black ribbons to honor the memory of Bourke Corcoran, the Cohasset High School senior killed in a car accident earlier in June. Corcoran, a member of the Cohasset varsity team, had supported the youth lacrosse program; the team had planned to wear the ribbons during the Jamboree, which was washed out the weekend after Corcoran's death.

The game ended a terrific season for Cohasset's two teams. Cohasset White finished 8-2, splitting games against the Blue team and dropping a one-goal game to Quincy. Cohasset Blue ended the season 3-5-1, dropping several close games late in the spring. The two teams combined to play as a unified team twice, going 1-0-1. This was the first time that the youth lacrosse program fielded two teams in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League.

"It was a very satisfying season. Going to two teams meant that we demanded more from these kids than any team we have had here, and these kids responded. We told them at the start of the season that those who stuck it out would be champions, and that's how these guys played."

—COACH CHUCK JAFFE

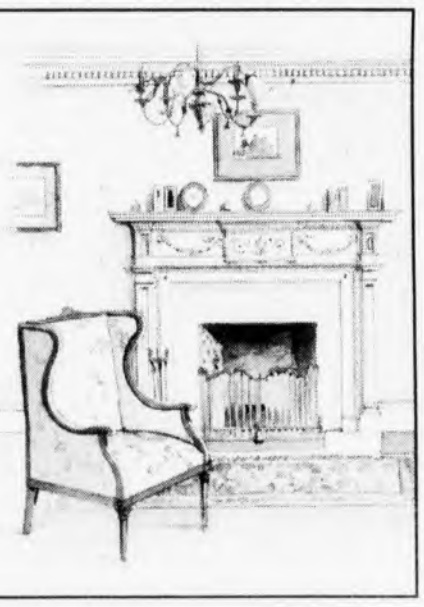
"It was a very satisfying season," said coach Chuck Jaffe, who ran the junior program along with Bob Inman. "Going to two teams meant that we demanded more from these kids than any team we have had here, and these kids responded. We told them at the start of the season that those who stuck it out would be champions, and that's how these guys played."

The two squads placed seven players on the South Division II All-Star team. Rasmussen, Murphy, Digan, Robby Carpenter, Mike Ernst, Michael Devine and Stephen Davis made the All-Star squad, which played in an All-Star Jamboree June 20. In addition, Dewayne Morris was awarded a Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League scholarship to the Top Gun Lacrosse Camp.

Rasmussen shattered the junior program record for points in a season, scoring 36 goals and 17 assists for 53 points. No other Cohasset junior player has ever averaged more than four points per game.

Jaffe also praised his defensemen, Greg DeAngelo, Danny Roth, Reed Smith, Justin Runey, Stephen Davis, Casey Coleman, Dominic Strazzulla and Kirby Bukowski. "They don't get a lot of credit in the scorebook," Jaffe said, "but they really were the foundation on which everything rested this season. Casey, Dominic and Kirby — all fifth-graders — improved as much or more than anyone during the season, and it will be great to have them back next year."

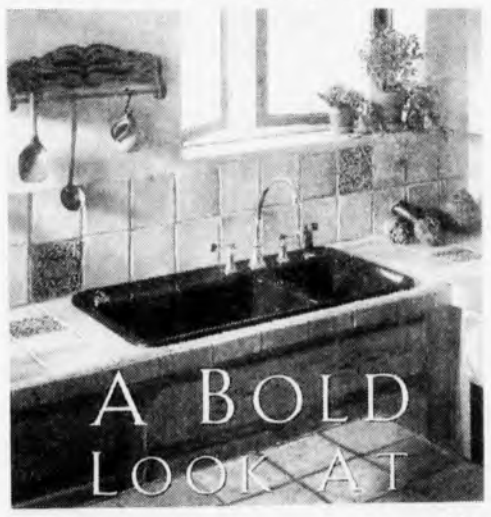
Jaffe also is excited about next year's prospects because the team will return a lot of goal scoring. He noted that Rasmussen, Digan and Devine all "popped for a few goals as fifth-graders," and then became big scorers this year. That will give Pilczak, Greg Smith, Jon Grimm and Jake Previte something to shoot for.



Here are the final scoring and goaltending statistics for Cohasset Blue and White teams in 1998:

Michael Rasmussen 36 goals, 17 assists, 53 points; Paul Digan 15-20-35; Michael Devine 13-4-17; Tim Pilczak 12-1-13; Mike Ernst 11-2-13; Robby Carpenter 11-1-12; Michael Hajjar 7-5-12; Garrett Curran 11-0-11; Dewayne Morris 7-1-8; Greg Smith 7-0-7; Mark Davis 7-0-7; Paul Cotter 3-4-7; Nick Murphy 6-0-6; D.J. Silvia 4-2-6; Mike Geddes 3-3-6; Jake Previte 5-0-5; Jon Grimm 4-1-5; Michael Martone 3-0-3; Malcolm Stansell 2-1-3; Jon Littauer 1-2-3; Andrew O'Keeffe 2-0-2; Chris Barber 2-0-2; Zach Markert 2-0-2; Ryan Tufts 1-1-2; Greg DeAngelo 1-0-1; Stephen Davis 1-0-1.

In the goal, Nick Murphy recorded 104 saves against 72 goals surrendered, for a save percentage of .577. Chris Simms stopped 45 of the 80 shots he faced, with Pilczak stopping 16 of 30 and Curran stopping 12 of 15 in the season's final game.



Jaffe and Inman will run the Cohasset Recreation Department summer lacrosse camp (beginning June 29) for players entering fifth- and sixth grades in the fall. The coaching duo currently plans to return to the program in 1999 — hopefully with the addition of at least one more coach — to once again field two teams in Mass Bay action. Registrations will be held in November or December.

1997 WEEKLY TAB #1 CHOICE READERS' CHOICE AWARDS

Annual event drew upwards of 8,000

Festival heralds start of summer

By Jim Baggett
CORRESPONDENT

This past weekend more than 8,000 people enjoyed the arts and crafts that were showcased at the South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common. Beginning on Friday at 2 p.m., the 43rd annual festival lasted the entire weekend and was a complete success, organizers said.

"The festival marks the beginning of the summer for a lot of people around town," said festival coordinator, Rhonda Myers. "The people really seem to love this weekend."

Surrounded by the colonial walls of Cohasset Village, the "old New England" themed art festival was able to capture many of the areas finer scenic points. Among the works were a number of artist's portrayals of Minot's Light which were found at the members' exhibition in the main tent.

"We had 20 pieces of artwork sold from the juried tent," said Myers. "We also had a silent auction in which eight pieces that were done by members were sold."

Proceeds — which average near $3,000 each year — from the main tent, go to SSAC scholarships, exhibitions, and the "Arts To Go" program. The Arts To Go program is set up to provide art classes for schools that have cut their program, but still wish to educate students in the area of art.

Aside from local artists' paintings, there were also 96 vendors booths on hand for the festival. The booths consisted of just about everything one could imagine from fine foods to quality craftsmanship. All of the crafts, which were on sale at the festival, were made entirely by hand and sold endlessly.

"By the end of the weekend many of the vendors had nothing left," said Myers. " Out of the 96 vendors that were on hand, 95 said that they would be returning to the festival next year."

Providing some great food at the festival was The Silver Spoon, which is located right on South Main street, adjacent to the Common. The restaurant provided a lobster dinner for those who signed up in advance and paid the $12. There was great participation for the dinner and was termed "a success" by those who were involved in the serving effort.

Coinciding with Father's Day, the festival supplied a wide range of gift ideas for the holiday. Gifts that consisted of quality crafted tools and utensils, which were relatively inexpensive, and interesting artwork.

Coinciding with Father's Day, the festival supplied a wide range of gift ideas for the holiday. Gifts that consisted of quality crafted tools and utensils, which were relatively inexpensive, and interesting artwork.

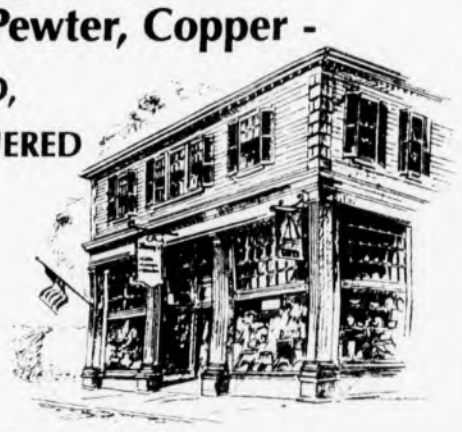
"I try to take something ordinary and bring out the beauty so others can see it," said photographer Kristen Hand, whose booth consisted of a wide array of dramatic New England landscapes that she had captured on film.

Hand, of Scituate, said that what sets Cohasset's art festival apart from others is that there are more artisans participating in the festival.

The weekend's festival not only provided art for the eyes, but for the ears as well. Throughout the festival there were a number of concerts put on by local performers, which filled the air, including Matthew Malloch's Bagpipes, the South Shore Bay Band, and the Cohasset Common Fiddlers Gathering. The concerts gave those who were in attendance a chance to hear a variety of music and gave the festival its own mystique.

"There is a lot of variety here," said potter George Dalton. "I enjoy seeing the different types of art."

Dalton, who owns his own studio in Falmouth, has been doing pottery demos on the common for seven years and has been teaching pottery at the Art Center for 14. Onlookers to Dalton's demonstration were captivated by the process of creativity that took place on his potter's wheel.



The talk of the festival seemed to be the Second Congregational Church Strawberry Festival. About 525 quarts of fresh strawberries were used over the weekend in the construction of more than 2,000 strawberry shortcakes, which were sold. The church was also able to sell more than 1,500 hot-dogs and hamburgers. Money raised from the Strawberry Festival benefits the church's outreach program and mission.

The success of this year's festival was mostly due in part to community participation and volunteer efforts. Organizers said $15,000 was raised by volunteers for local charities and that this year's festival was one of the best in recent years.

New prez brings fresh ideas to Cohasset Dramatic Club

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Scituate resident Jean Digiacomandrea never realized what she was missing.

A fan of classic horror films, Digiacomandrea saw an ad in 1996 for open auditions for parts in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "Dracula" and hesitated.

Her father convinced her to give it a try. Brimming with a newfound confidence from a plus-size modeling course she had just completed, Digiacomandrea decided to audition.

"I figured if I could walk down a runway in front of a thousand people, I could do this," she recalled.

Digiacomandrea won the role of Nurse Cassidy — her very first experience acting on stage.

"I was hooked after that," she said.

In 1997, Digiacomandrea became the stage secretary for the "Wizard of Oz" and took care of Toto throughout the production. She also landed roles in "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever" and "You Can't Take It With You."

"This is something I wish I was involved in earlier. I wasted all these years. I wish I had been involved in it. It's so much fun," Digiacomandrea said.

Jean Digiacomandrea is the new president of the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

Then she joined the club's board of directors and co-produced last May's production of "Alice in Wonderland," which had a cast of almost 100.

"I've kind of had a hand in every part of it," Digiacomandrea said.

Following "Alice in Wonderland," the other members of the board of directors elected Digiacomandrea to a two-year term as president of the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

Digiacomandrea described herself as detail-oriented and organized — two traits she believes will help her in her new role as president of the club.

"So much has to be kept in order. If you're not organized, it can be a disaster," she said.

As the new president, Digiacomandrea has many new ideas to help the club continue its almost 80 years of success, she said.

Digiacomandrea takes over the reins from Dawn Rota of Scituate, who led the club the last four years.

"The club is in great shape. I want to keep it going on the right track," she said.

Now in its 78th season, the Cohasset Dramatic Club has traditionally produced three plays each year.

This year, the club plans to stage four plays, including its first ever interactive thriller. Digiacomandrea and the other board members are in the process of selecting a murder mystery that features audience participation for its October production, she said.

In February and March, the club will produce two children's one-act plays, followed by a comedy and a musical in the spring.

Auditions for the interactive murder mystery will be held in August and 10 performances of the show will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium during the last two weeks in October and the first week in November.

The Cohasset Town Hall auditorium has been home to the club since its inception. The club rehearses there two nights a week and on Sundays. On occasion, the club performs at Scituate High School because it has a bigger stage and more seating, she said.

Town meetings and elections are also held in the auditorium, which means the club must keep the hall and stage ship shape for official functions, she said.

"We leave the auditorium spotless and also clean the rest rooms. That's how they leave it for us," Digiacomandrea explained.

Digiacomandrea also hopes to bolster the club's productions by attracting both adults and children in the families that are already members. In many cases, parents of the young actors who have been in the club's plays have never considered themselves candidates for a life in the theater, she said.

Citing her own initial inexperi on the stage, Digiacomandr she would like to see the clut sor training sessions for rookie a during the summer.

Dramatic Club members work diligently during production season to make the different shows successful, she said. But Digiacomandrea wants to initiate a social club so that members can meet each other and celebrate as a group at other times throughout the year. With a membership of 200 families, many actors never have a chance to get to know each other because they are working on different productions, she said.

The case of the missing punch bowl

A longstanding tradition of the Cohasset Dramatic Club has been missing for several years.

The club's board of directors would like to see a sterling silver punch bowl with the names of past club presidents' names engraved on it returned to the club, said new president Jean Digiacomandrea.

"It could be in somebody's attic someplace. Who knows?" she said.

The club would hate to lose this piece of history that has been around since the club's inception 78 years ago, she said.

If anyone has any information on the whereabouts of the punch bowl, contact Digiacomandrea at 545-5094 or c/o the Cohasset Dramatic Club, P.O. Box 552, Scituate, 02066.

Regional train talks slated

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Instead of going it alone, Cohasset now will join other communities to convince the MBTA the state must pay for the problems the coming Greenbush train will bring. Until this week, town officials avoided chances to team up with the four other towns along the track between Scituate and Braintree. But the selectmen Monday signaled they are ready to switch tracks and scrap the past year's go-it-alone approach.

"Send the invitations. The party is on July 29."
— Selectman Nan Roth

Moreover, in an apparent bid for leadership of the five towns, Cohasset invited the other communities to a meeting set for July 29.

In so doing it became the second of the five towns to call a summit on Greenbush in as many weeks. Scituate selectmen last week also asked for a regional meeting on the train. Both towns put issues about noise, air pollution and vibration on the agenda. But Cohasset also sent a copy of their report by consultant Peter Guldberg of Tech Environmental in Waltham. His Selectmen may decide to ask for a hearing on a liquor license violation at a Route 3A convenience store after all.

At their meeting Monday, selectmen opted to send a warning letter admonishing the management at Cohasset Food Mart in Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square for allegedly selling beer to a minor on June 20.

But after sleeping on it, Selectman Diane Sullivan contacted Town Manager Mark Haddad on Tuesday with her concerns that they had made the wrong decision, Haddad said.

Dean Rizzo, owner of Aquarius Sunrooms, has been at the forefront of the effort to revitalize Cohasset Village.

A vision for the village

Rizzo fights to bring vitality back to town center

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The revitalization of Cohasset Village is beginning to move from a dream to a reality. The state is still expected to give final approval for a $165,000 grant to construct a new sidewalk and associated improvements in front of St. Stephen's church. A $5,000 grant is paying for a study of ways to connect the Village to the harbor. And there are other grants in the works, including a $60,000 request to study ways to connect the downtowns of Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Cohasset to attract consumers, tourists and visitors from neighboring communities.

A number of dedicated individuals have made worked hard on different projects aimed at revitalizing the village. But the one name that seems to pop-up in all of the various projects and committees working to renew the village is Dean Rizzo.

It is difficult to talk with Rizzo without bringing up the village. It seems that whenever there is a discussion of the village, Rizzo is the one leading the discussion. Revitalizing the village is no easy task. Businesses come and go; there are no large restaurants to attract diners; the sidewalks are not exactly suitable for pedestrian traffic; the village is within walking distance of the harbor, yet there are few connections between the two areas.

"It's a process that needs a sense of energy to get off the ground, and that energy is being created by a lot of other people and by me," Rizzo said.

Rizzo's passion for the village comes in part from his desire to convert the center of town into the heart of the community as it was in the past.

"Years ago, the village was the heart and spirit of the community. It was the place where people gathered daily to meet and talk and gather on community issues and do business."
— Dean Rizzo, village activist

"Years ago, the village was the heart and spirit of the community," Rizzo said. "It was the place where people gathered daily to meet and talk and gather on community issues and do business. It is my hope and the hope of the village revitalization committee to bring that sense of community back to the village."

And, as a merchant who owns a business in the village, Aquarius Sunrooms, Rizzo feels great empathy for other small businessman struggling to succeed downtown.

"I've been self-employed for a long time and know how hard it is to make a small business work," Rizzo said. "Small businessmen have to wear many hats and work after-hours doing the books or making customer calls. I've been there. Something inside me drives me to help those people."

So how did this quiet person who has lived in Cohasset for only five-and-one-half years come to be one of the driving forces behind the village revitalization? Eight years ago, Rizzo was still living in his hometown of Quincy as he prepared to graduate from the University of Massachusetts at Boston with a double major in economics and sociology.

"It was one of those things where I had to take six courses at the end to get a degree, so I saw that I could get a double-major if I took six sociology courses," Rizzo said.

After college, Rizzo established himself as an independent businessman, eventually

Facilities audit forum Tuesday

Selectmen, school committee, capital budget committee, library trustees and advisory committee will meet at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, July 7 in the high school to discuss the recently completed town facilities audit with KFP Architects, hired to perform the study.

The meeting, which is open to the public, will also be televised live on cable-TV, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. For more information, call Haddad at 383-4105.

Old newspapers wanted for history

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the Committee on Town History is desperately seeking copies of the Cohasset Cottager, a local paper published between the years of 1950-1978. The committee also needs Cohasset Mariners from 1982-1984. The papers are being used as reference material for the new town history which will cover the years from 1950-2000. Please contact Sullivan in care of the selectmen's office at 383-4105 if you have any of the back issues being sought.

Sullivan, 708 Jerusalem Road, and the volume's author, Jacqueline Dormitzer, 334 S. Main St., are the newest additions to the town history committee.

Beach and RTF permits will be on sale Thursday, July 2, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and resume the normal schedule Monday, July 6 — Monday and Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are 2 for $65, and for a sole resident $33.

Taverna liquor license ok'ed

Selectmen agreed to issue three, one-day liquor licenses to the Greek Orthodox Church for Taverna festival which will be held from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., July 3-5.

Mooring bids opened

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is pleased with the bids received for removal of the town moorings during the upcoming harbor dredging project.

"We received six bids ranging from a low bid of $38,000 to a high bid of $120,000," he said. Three bids were in the $40,000 range. Haddad is in the process of checking the references of the three lowest bidders.

Town meeting appropriated $100,000 for the project. Should the low bidder be selected, Haddad suggested selectmen go back to town meeting to rescind that article and transfer the funds from the Boat Excise Tax Account to cover the cost of the project.

Village street realignment

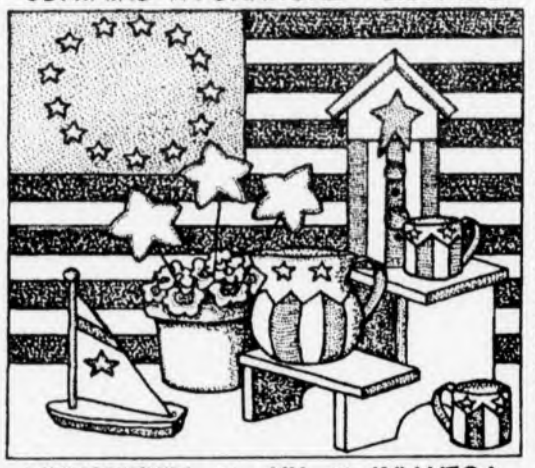
The Town of Cohasset will be temporarily changing the roadway configuration at the intersection of Elm Street and South Main Street in Cohasset Village from Monday, July 13 through Saturday, July 19.

The purpose of this re-alignment is to monitor the impacts this proposed design change may have on vehicle and pedestrian traffic flow and to solicit public comments. This road re-alignment is proposed as part of the project to establish a new walkway along South Main Street from Robert E. Jason Road to the intersection of Elm Street. This project is a result of a $165,900 Transportation Enhancement Grant awarded to the town by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

Public input and comments are sought regarding this intersection design change, as well as on the entire project. Please send your comments to The Village Task Force Committee, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, Mass. 02025. The Village Task Force Committee will be conducting a public forum to review the project on Thursday, July 30 at 7:30 p.m. in the town hall auditorium.

Memorial flag pole plaques

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen that two plaques will be installed on the base of the new flag pole on the town common. One for the original donor, the Cocker family, and the other for the new donor, Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. The only issue left to be resolved is the exact placement of the plaques on the base, Haddad said.



Barrow finds 'missing by-law'

Thanks to Richard Barrow, selectmen will need one less policy. At a prior meeting selectmen decided to establish a policy on terminating citizens from town boards after they had missed four consecutive meetings without an excuse. As it turns out the policy is redundant because the issue is already spelled out in subparagraph (v) of Section 3 of the Town Bylaws. Barrow brought the by-law to Town Manager Mark Haddad's attention.

The by-law says a committee may vote to petition selectmen in writing to remove a member who is absent for four consecutive meetings of the committee without the permission of its chairman.

Financial planning committee established

Selectmen have appointed a financial planning committee to begin long-range financial planning for the town. The committee will be made up of the Town Manager Mark Haddad, Town Accountant Michael Buckley, Selectman Nan Roth, and a representative from the school committee, advisory committee and capital budget committee.

The Music Circus:

A place where memories are made

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The Music Circus officially celebrates its 50th season this summer. Much has changed since 1951 when a green canvas tent was first raised on the "horse grounds" of the former Bancroft Estate. The tent is green and yellow now, and the theater seats are anchored in cement. But the glamorous summer evenings under the canopy still remind natives of the days, not too long ago, when people crowded the village streets on play night. A show opening night then meant parties at the private homes of the board of directors, a pre-show dinner at Hugo's or the Red Lion Inn and dessert or a nightcap afterwards. The event made the society columns and was "very swank," according to former selectman Peter Pratt.

WINDOWS INTO COHASSET

"You would dress to go to the summer theater," he said recalling the crowds decked out in straw hats and white bucks. Even the less formal affairs, the summer matinees, were important in the life of the community, he said.

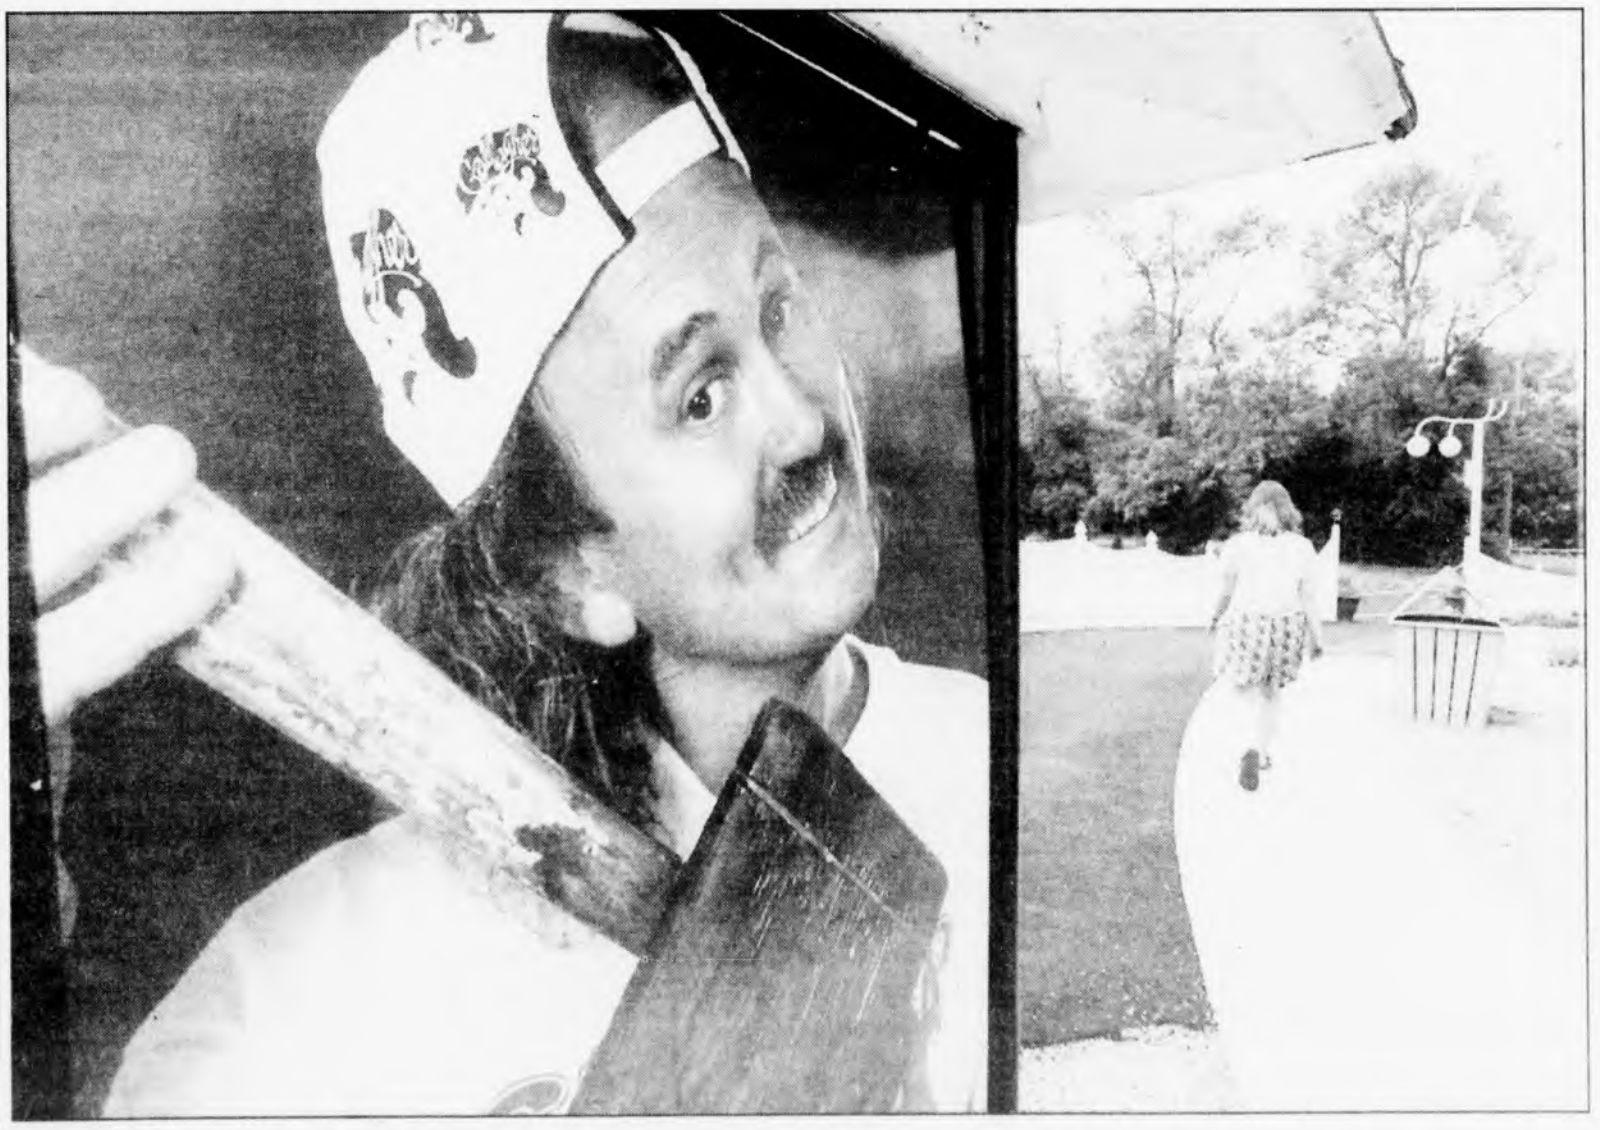
"Many kids in the community went to the matinee, and it was their first exposure to live theater. Some were drawn into it and became apprentices," said Pratt who became the Music Circus' first "house manager" when he was a high school student. In his view, the continuing excellence of the drama program in the schools can be traced in part to the summer theater experience and the opportunity to study at the apprentice school run by Ruth Rawson.

Though the economy changed the kind of productions mounted at the Music Circus, the theater is still owned by the South Shore Playhouse Associates, the group that also now owns the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis. Originally, they intended to offer Broadway musicals and "summer stock" at the music theater. When the traveling companies became too expensive, the business changed to concerts featuring stars like Diana Ross and Julio Inlesias.

But in a way, the Music Circus is connected to a tradition of serious summer theater in Cohasset that started before the tent was raised. Cohasset's place in the "straw hat circuit" was established when the South Shore Playhouse Associates were founded in 1933. Their first summer theater company performed in the town hall. Humphrey Bogart was the "mainstay" of the 1934 summer season, according to the account in Burtram Pratt's Cohasset history. In a story Pratt omitted, the man who became a legendary actor left something of an impression on Hingham police chief Oscar Beck. When Beck stopped the actor and his first wife for reckless driving, his wife bit the police chief. Years later after Bogart won the Academy Award, Beck used to tell the story of his local escapade ending with the punch line, "That's how Humphrey got his first Oscar."

Bogart, Sam Jaffe and Van Heflin rank among the most famous actors who played Cohasset. But writers as well as actors distinguished the Cohasset summer theater. When Alexander Dean, the Yale University drama professor, took over as the artistic director, he encouraged novelists to try writing plays. Thornton Wilder's classic "Our Town" had its premiere in Cohasset. Its significance to American literature is noted by the critic Brooks Atkinson.

"Many kids in the community went to the matinee, and it was their first exposure to live theater. Some were drawn into it and became apprentices."
PETER PRATT



"If Thornton Wilder had never written anything except "Our Town," Atkinson wrote, "he would still have received the highest respect of the American people. "Our Town" is an inspired allegory of human life—beautiful, merciful, and touching, but also familiar and reassuring. 'Do any human beings ever realize life while they live it—every, every minute?' one of the chief characters inquires in the last act. 'No,' the commentator replies. 'The saints and the poets, maybe—they do some.' Also Thornton Wilder—he knew the worth of life in 1938—in the middle of the Depression, incidentally."

Moreover, Wilder was not the only novelist turned playwright to debut in Cohasset. With less success, the world premiere of "It Can't Happen Here" by Sinclair Lewis did happen in Cohasset. And even though the reviews disappointed him, Lewis went back to the typewriter and wrote a novel "Bethal Merriday" about his summer in town.

Peter Pratt said the "flavor" of the artists' colony is no longer part of the summer theater scene in Cohasset. But the Music Circus is still a place where memories are being made and is among only a handful of tent theaters left in the nation. The raising of the tent, one of the signs of spring, is on a par with the blooming of the forsythia in Cohasset. It takes two days and 18 workers to hoist it above the 2,300 seat theater. There is not a bad seat in the house because the wood stage revolves during the performance, doing at least one full turn, so everybody has a good view of the performers.

Rizzo fights to bring vitality back to town center

moving to Cohasset and opening Aquarius Sunrooms, a sunroom dealer and installer. Rizzo also works for the South Chamber of Commerce, located in Quincy, a position that allows him to view challenges to local businesses with an eye on solutions that benefit the entire region.

As a small local businessman, Rizzo quickly became involved with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce where he learned about efforts to revitalize the stagnant business atmosphere in the village.

He also became involved in many local committees. He is a former member of the Cohasset MBTA Mitigation Committee. However, selectmen asked Rizzo to leave that committee because they believed his views were not in line with their own. Currently, he is chairman of the village revitalization committee, which is run by the chamber of commerce, and the village revitalization task force, which is a committee appointed by the selectmen.

Rizzo met many people interested in revitalizing the village. He is quick to give a lot of other people just as much credit for village revitalization projects as himself. He points to architect Jim Sandell as one of the driving forces behind the Village revitalization. He also mentions Jim Shipsky, who is performing the study looking at ways to connect the Village and the Harbor.

"Jim [Shipsky] possesses a great vision and hope for the Village," Rizzo said. "He just let's his mind go and is really a dedicated person."

Then there is Neil Murphy of Murphy associates, who donated some of the engineering work for the St. Stephen's sidewalk project. Rizzo praises the board of selectmen for believing in the sidewalk project and putting up $10,000 in seed money. And he also praises many other agencies who have helped the ongoing efforts to revitalize the Village with grants, including the Rotary Club, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, and even the MBTA.

Rizzo is adamant that revitalizing the village as a community center and a place for businesses to thrive requires the efforts of many people, especially residents.

"Residents are the main cog that support the village," Rizzo said. "We want residents to be part of the energy that was once there. It's important to have input from town officials, businesses and the community. We need input from all of those groups to implement goals for the village based on the desires of the community. With a diverse group, you have a better chance of making it happen. It's also important to have community involvement to qualify for government grants."

Rizzo concedes that it won't be easy, and there are many obstacles. The village is "off the beaten path", as Rizzo points out. People who come to the village really need a reason for being there. There is also a lack in the variety of stores that can serve the needs of residents.

Rizzo said residents need to let the business community know what kind of businesses they are willing to support regularly, although many residents have requested a desire for restaurants. The Red Lion Inn could serve that need if the current owners can make the historic business work.

There are basic infrastructure problems in the area, such as poor signage, inadequate parking, poor sidewalks and a lack of appropriate lighting.

"There will also be differences of opinion, and ideas that may be good or bad," Rizzo said. "We want people to get involved and come into the process with an open mind and an understanding that there will be changes, and compromises to make this a successful endeavor."

But none of these challenges are insurmountable. And the two village committees are hard at work on grants, master plans, resident surveys, public meetings, and a host of plans that could transform the village into a quaint downtown center attractive to everyone.

"There is so much potential and natural beauty in the village for residents and others," Rizzo said. "If we can expand on that beauty and enhance the public's awareness of what we have and make it more inviting, we can revitalize the village. People won't just pull in with their cars, take care of their business and leave. It could be a place where people want to walk around and enjoy the atmosphere and see the beauty of a New England town."

review found the T underestimated the train's impact on the quality of life. Guldberg's report was copied to a web site on Greenbush earlier. The web site is connected to anti-train activist Alexander Macmillan of Hingham.

Selectwoman Nan Roth, a liaison to the Greenbush Mitigation Committee, said Cohasset had an opportunity to set the agenda for the five towns by hosting the meeting.

"Send the invitations. The party is on July 29," she said. But Roth was not entirely optimistic the towns could work together effectively. Nor were other members of the panel formed to negotiate with the T. In particular, selectwoman Diane Sullivan restated her doubts a united stand by the five towns would benefit Cohasset.

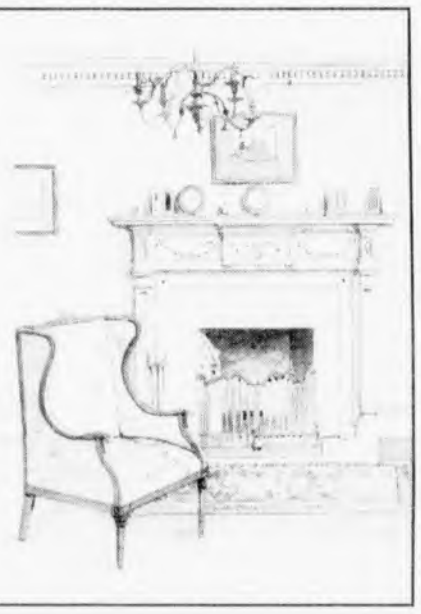
"I've stated this many times, and I'll repeat myself," she said. "I feel if we join up with Hingham, their agenda is entirely different." In past efforts, Hingham's Macmillan on the Citizens Advisory Committee has made it clear he is looking for the other towns to help supply information to derail the train.

"That hasn't been our focus at all," she said because the Cohasset selectmen have operated on the assumption the train is coming.

Ironically, a private meeting with Macmillan held by Town Manager Mark Haddad, selectmen Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris and selectman Merle Brown was one of the catalysts for the apparent change in policy. Brown attended the mitigation board's meeting Thursday to explain the outcome of the earlier talks and present his views on bringing at least some of the towns together to strike a deal with the T.

"If we make the same request from the T as a larger group, I feel we have more impact," Brown said. However, Cohasset should not take a stand on issues like the proposed Hingham tunnel or the Scituate parking lot.

"I wouldn't want to get involved with those," he said.



Committee Chairman Thomas Gruber favored making an effort to join the other towns. But like Sullivan, he remembered the disappointing past efforts.

"Everything Diane said is true," said Gruber. "Unfortunately, it seemed we couldn't get anything going."

Mitigation board member Michael Dick also sounded a cautious note. He doubted the T would "respond positively" but said a summit would at least attract attention from legislators and publicize the fact the towns are struggling with the T over Greenbush.

"We go on record as being overwhelmed by this process," he said. "The environmental impact review process is a sham."

Truck ban possible on King Street

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen will seek input from the traffic study committee on the possibility of a truck ban on King Street and other traffic flow changes on the narrow street.

At their meeting this week, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he had been approached by several residents requesting the town impose a truck ban on the street. (see related letter, page 10).

Although only five trucks over 2-1/2 tons traveled the road during a 24-hour survey conducted in 1993 by the Norfolk County Engineers, selectmen think it's unnecessary for any trucks to travel on King Street which runs in the same approximate direction as Route 3A.

"There is no reason for trucks on that road, it's way too narrow," Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said. "Eliminating trucks would improve one measure of safety on that road."

Selectmen will also ask the traffic study committee to look at making part of King Street one way.

The cement posts damaged in a June 9 fatal accident on the street have been repaired.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said replacing the posts with a steel guard rail would cost $8,800.

Driver to be arraigned on MV charges

William Leigh Atherton, 18, of Clay Spring Road will be arraigned on a charge of motor vehicle homicide by negligence later this month, the Norfolk County District Attorney's office said.

At a show cause hearing June 26 at Quincy District Court, Atherton was also charged with speeding, failure to stay in marked lane and driving to endanger.

On June 9, Atherton was driving a 1995 Nissan 200 SX which was involved in an accident on King Street that claimed the life of his passenger and Cohasset High classmate, Bourke Corcoran, also 18.

Police said Atherton's car was traveling in excess of 70 mph when it careened out of control at about 11 p.m. and hit five pilings at the side of the road, airplaned into a tree, ricocheted into a second tree and crashed down an embankment along King Street.

Motor vehicle homicide is a misdemeanor punishable by up to 2-1/2 years in prison, police said.

The Registry of Motor Vehicles indefinitely revoked Atherton's license June 11, police said.

At Friday's hearing, Assistant District Attorney Courtney Cahill and Atherton's lawyer, Daniel O'Malley of Quincy, agreed to issue the four charges, the district attorney's office said.

The specific arraignment date was not immediately available.

O'Malley did not return phone calls by press time.

According to records obtained from the registry, Atherton had three speeding tickets and one written warning for speeding in the past 18 months and was involved in a "surchargeable" single car accident. His license was suspended in August 1997 for having three tickets within a year. It was reinstated in October.

DeGiacomo steps down from zoning board

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo called it quits Monday. DeGiacomo logged 14 years on the quasi-judicial committee but decided to resign to devote his attention to his school board duties. He was elected to the school committee this April. In a telephone interview Tuesday he said he intended to leave the zoning board after he won the school board election but ìstayed on for a few months to finish up businessî connected to St. Anthonyís Parish House and Cohasset Heights Landfill isuses.

ìThe decision writingî (for the zoning board) ìtakes an awful lot of time if you do it right. And the meetings often go past midnight. It was too much with the school committee and baseball,î he said. (DeGiacomo is vice-president of the Little League.)

His seat has been taken by Ben Lacy, a former associate member. Lacy moves up and becomes a full member of the zoning board. Lisa Hewitt has become the new associate member.

Barbara Power has also resigned as a regular member of the zoning board but will serve as an alternate on that board along with Hewitt. Also, newly appointed from alternate to regular members is J. Anson Whealler.

Rainfall, pollution cause closing of shellfish beds

By Jennifer R. Horan and Lesley Mahoney
STAFF WRITERS

As of Saturday at 5 a.m., the shellfishing beds along the coastline of Scituate tested clean and were reopened for harvesting. Shellfish beds in Scituate and Cohasset as well as throughout New England closed June 15 due to record rainfalls and contamination.

By Monday, most of the major embayments along the South Shore had been reopened as well. The state Division of Marine Fisheries is steadily reopening flats as they test clean.

In Cohasset, however, the levels of bacteria are still too high to allow shellfishing. Bassings Beach in Cohasset Harbor — which falls under Scituate's jurisdiction — also remains closed.

But Cohasset's closures had no effect on recreational shellfishing because the beds have been closed due to pollution for about 10 years, said Cohasset Harbormaster John Winters. The areas are tested in the spring, fall and summer, but remained closed due to high levels of fecal coliform bacteria.

"We don't have any clams in Cohasset. I don't know why. Maybe it's pollution," Winters said. "If we opened up every clam flat in Cohasset, it wouldn't be worth going. There's nothing there."

Neil Churchill, a biologist from the state Division of Marine Fisheries, said the shellfish beds in Cohasset have been tested repeatedly in conjunction with the town's conservation commission and the Massachusetts Bay Project. Their studies have not located the source of pollution that is causing bacteria levels well over the highest rate the state division tests for — 50 colonies per 100 milliliters. Until the source is located and dealt with, the levels will remain unacceptably high, preventing the reopening of the beds, Churchill said.

From the New Hampshire border to the Cape Cod Canal, shellfish beds were shut down June 15 when fecal coliform bacteria exceeded the maximum allowable level of 14 colonies per 100 milliliters, according to Frank Germano, senior shellfish biologist for the state Division of Marine Fisheries' shellfish project out of Pocasset, which covers from Boston to Rhode Island, including Cape Cod and the Islands.

The hikes in bacteria were caused by fresh water run-off from things like flooded septic systems and basements into embayments, Churchill said.

Fecal coliform bacteria are indicator organisms of waste, Churchill said. Any reading of more than 14 colonies presents a health risk, Germano said, adding that the standard is a conservative one and was set with the young, elderly and those with the weakest immune systems in mind.

While an inconvenience for shellfishermen, no one disputes that the shut-downs were necessary precautions in the interest of public health.

"While we're trying to open as many areas as fast as possible, our number one concern is public health," Germano said.

When an area tests clean, the state agency waits three days before reopening that area to shellfishing. That time frame gives shellfish time to "purge and purify any contamination," Germano said.

"We can't do anything because it's Mother Nature," said Scituate Shellfish Warden Joseph Strazdes. "It's frustrating for clammers, but it's better to be safe than sorry."

Ingesting contaminated clams could cause a variety of health problems, including hepatitis and other viruses, he said.

"We can do without that kind of risk," Strazdes said.

Despite the temporary closure of the shellfish beds, clammers have had few opportunities to harvest due to repeated rain. Town bylaws only allow shellfishing once a week in Scituate, on either Thursday or Sunday.

"We've had more than our share of rain," Strazdes said. "Summertime is a busy time for families to go clamming. It's unfortunate that the resource hasn't been available."

Last week's closings mark the first time since October of 1996 when as many shellfish beds were closed.

"They're calling it a 50-year event, but unfortunately in the last 10 years, we've had five 50-year events. We see an event like this every three to five years," Germano said.

Prior to the 1996 closings, the "No Name" storm of October 1991 also forced clam beds to shut down, he said.

The frequency of the storms, however, provides the state with a reserve of knowledge to deal with future events.

"We have enough data now to go in and do a large-scale closing and be confident what we do leave open is safe," Germano said.

Liquor hearing

man Ronnie McMorris said she will ask the board to seek a hearing on the matter.

"We felt we could accomplish the same thing with a warning," McMorris said.

But in retrospect, she said a hearing is needed to make the store aware how serious the violation is.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said at about 11 p.m. on June 20, Officer Gregory Lennon observed a young man, who did not appear to be 21, standing in front of the counter at Cohasset Food Mart with a 30 pack of Bud Lite.

When Lennon questioned the youth after leaving the store, he first said he was 21 and then admitted he was 19, Noonan said.

"He had shown a false ID in the past to the clerk but had shown nothing this time," the chief said.

Further investigation revealed a six pack of Bud Ice in a paper bag in the car where three other minors were waiting.

"They had beer and were getting more," Noonan said.

Paul Orrall, 59, the night manager who sold the beer to the minor, said it was an oversight on his part.

He said he had carded the youth in the past but did not do so this time.

Orrall said all employees at the store are aware that they should ask for identification of anyone who looks under 30. There are signs posted to that effect, he said.

"We will definitely be more careful in the future," he said.

McMorris said she will ask selectmen to vote to hold a hearing at the board's meeting Tuesday. The hearing could be scheduled for their subsequent meeting July 14, she said.

Arrested in the incident and charged with minors transporting alcohol were Erik Zukauskas, 19; Matthew Taylor, 20; and Steven Walsh, 20, all of Scituate and David Demoracski, 20, of East Longmeadow, Ma.

Noonan said he would like the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee to promote training programs among all license holders in town to help ensure that minors cannot obtain alcohol.

EDITORIAL

Finally summer

Just in time for the Fourth of July holiday weekend, weather forecasters are predicting a break in the series of storms that have been soaking the South Shore of late. And it's about time. After a pretty lousy spring, weather-wise, we've also been deprived of any decent summer weather up till now.

We're told by forecasters that El Nino is waning. And it's just our luck, because those same forecasters tell us that the exit of El Nino heralds a more active hurricane season in the Atlantic Ocean.

But if El Nino has taken a powder, on what weather phenomenon do we have to blame all this rain and mugginess of late. It seems like we've been waiting for the sun forever.

The lack of any good beach days is especially hard to take here in Cohasset and Scituate where we have some of the best strands on the South Shore. From expansive Humarock and crescent shaped Pegotty, to the rocky shores of Egypt and Sand Hills and to Cohasset's Sandy Beach, local residents and visitors have good reason to celebrate summer and especially our nation's birthday.

Memorial Day may be the official start of the season, but for families it's the Fourth of July that brings summer in with a bang. The Fourth is quiet in Cohasset. Backyard barbecues and a busy beach will be the main attraction in town. But in neighboring communities throughout the South Shore there will be parades stepping off and dazzling fireworks lighting up the evening sky. If the clear weather holds, fireworks enthusiasts can catch displays in Abington, Weymouth and Hingham on two separate nights this weekend — July 3 in Weymouth and Abington and July 5 in Hingham.

Hingham also hosts one of the biggest and best parades around on the Fourth. The Hingham parade marches down Main Street at 10 a.m. on the heels of the town's recreation department annual road race which begins at 7 a.m. Late risers can head down to Duxbury which hosts its Fourth of July parade at 2 p.m.

If your kids can't wait for the carnival to come to town Abington is hosting one beginning at 4 p.m. on July 3. Fun and delicious food is cooking up in Cohasset for the annual Taverna, a Greek Festival, at the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem road.

Those interested in celebrating the nation's 222 birthday by brushing up on their history can travel to Quincy to the Adams National Historic Site "Old House" where visitors will play delegates to the Continental Congress in Philadelphia. Two sessions of congress will be held, one from 1 to 3 p.m. the other from 7 to 9 p.m.. and afterward delegates will have an opportunity to ring the Liberty Bell and take home a copy of the Declaration of Independence.

After a gloomy June, this weekend's Fourth of July events promises to kick off summer with flare.

Please, save uniqueness at World's End

TRUSTEES OF RESERVATIONS

I have observed the subtle changes to World's End for nearly four decades. In the last few years I have noticed large areas of open field turning into a thicket-filled wilderness that is neither open fields or forest. Having observed the process of open fields growing up in Vermont and other areas where abandoned farmland turns back into forest, I recognize the symptoms.

First, the bushes fill in the fields and the area becomes an impenetrable tangle until 50 years or so later the taller trees dominate and shade the underbrush. It is my belief that between 50 and 65 percent of all the open fields of World's End are quickly turning back into a thicket. Given current trends, they will be unmowable in a few years as the bushes and small trees will have grown too thick.

I believe World's End to be a unique environment. It is neither completely natural nor developed. It is rather a man-made (Olmsted-designed) paradise which recreates an 18th century rural landscape of alternating fields, forest and dirt roads. This makes it unique, particularly in Massachusetts, where we have lost most of our farmland to either forest or development. With the fact that World's End is surrounded by water, the end result is even more unique and captivating as the views are enhanced by the open fields.

I do not know the reason for the near abandonment of the open fields and allowing them to return to brush. Surely if left to continue at its present pace the views across open fields to the sea, which are the hallmark of World's End, will gradually disappear. Olmsted's special place and plan will become an overgrown thicket resembling the vegetation on most of the Harbor Islands; too thick to walk through, too high to see across.

I believe that would be a shame. I understand it is costly to mow the fields. I have also been advised by your staff that the bird watchers have demanded that the fields not be mowed.

As one looks from Planters Hill, you can see the overdevelopment of Hull and areas of Hingham. You can also see the wild woodlands stretching around Turkey Hill. World's End, as envisioned by Olmsted, is neither a wild woodland nor an overdeveloped area. With the generosity of many citizens, you saved it in 1967 from the latter; I urge you not to abandon it to the former.

Please save the fields, the views and the uniqueness that is World's End.

Relay for Life support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the entire Relay for Life Planning Committee, I would like to express my most sincere thanks to the Cohasset Community for their support of and participation in the 1998 Second Annual Relay for Life held at Cohasset High School. Despite a brief thunderstorm, all went better than we could have imagined. To date, we have collected more than $40,000 to help fund our local programs and services to cancer patients.

I would particularly like to thank Pilgrim Coop Bank, Jade Forrest Kung Fu & Tai Chi, Papa Gino's Pizza, Hub Shipping, Petals the Clown, Sparkles the Clown, Cohasset School Committee and Cohasset High School for their dedication of time, talent and encouragement. A very special thanks to all of the cancer survivors who participated in the Survivor Lap. You are an inspiration to all of us!

On Monday, June 15, awards were distributed to the following participants:

The Chiefs, led by Jacqui Goyette, received awards for Team Spirit and Highest Fund-raiser Team ($6,608).

Bob Clifford, Hingham, received the award for the Highest Fund-raiser, Adult ($1,185).

Jeff Garber, Cohasset, received the award for Highest Fund-raiser, Student ($1,069).

Tim Baird, Cohasset, received an award for Outstanding Team Leader.

HEALTH NOTES

The environmental price of a perfect lawn

Health Notes

Recently, a gardener spread 35 pounds of fertilizer on the lawn around the garden on a small plot bordering upper Little Harbor. This plot has been used as a garden for at least 100 years. Only recently, however, have large amounts of fertilizer been used on its lawn. In June, after days of perfect warm weather, it rained, and the water all over Little Harbor, particularly next to the garden, began to show signs of algae growth. A thick mat of green algae has begun filling areas where algae has almost never appeared before. This algae mat will flourish and grow. This summer, we may see more evidence of algae in Little Harbor than we have for years. Soon, because of a state mandate, the town will be studying the water quality in Little Harbor, and if lawn chemicals are found to be a problem, a bit of voluntary restraint would be far superior to a much more expensive program of control of nitrogen in our groundwater.

Affluent Cohasset has many perfect lawns, green, automatically watered throughout the summer, but what price are we paying for this perfection?

Some neighbors saw a pigeon staggering around on a lawn which had the telltale orange flags which tells people not to use the lawn for a few days until the poisons have dissipated into the soil, and killed all the harmful weeds and grubs. The problem is that these insects provide the food for birds which seem to be disappearing from our trees, lawns and back yards. Grackles starlings and robins quickly adapt, and merely move to lawns which are not poisoned.

Migrating songbirds also probably learn where their best chances of food exist. There they go about their business of ridding the lawn of grubs and larvae, while the worms which have not been killed go about preparing the soil for an enthusiastic if less perfect crop of grass.

"But," you say, "my gardener insists that he's using exactly the right stuff." Application rates provided by experts in chemical companies intent on selling lawn chemicals to a greedy and believing market. It must be said that there are gardeners who understand eutrophication, the process of killing a pond by supplying nutrients to the soil surrounding it until an algae bloom results. There are gardeners who know that the beautiful grass, such as Kentucky Blue grass, they recommend may not be the most hardy for this climate. There are those for whom a lawn going dormant in the summer is not the end of the world. There are hosts of people and many lawn care professionals who subscribe to the latest crop production science, IPM, short for Integrated Pest Management which uses mostly natural means to control, not stamp out, insects.

And so, it's up to you, Mr. and Mrs. Homeowner. Do you have to have that perfect lawn, or can you do with one less perfect that may be of considerably greater benefit to the environment?

More on sewers and septics

Recently, there were two important meetings in town about sewers. The important thing about these meetings is that they represent a heightened recognition that the town cannot afford to make the wrong choices about wastewater treatment. The result could be a real health threat or costs which no one can afford. In this context, the Board of Health seeks to work with the Sewer Commission to reexamine options that may be available to those people who are scheduled for sewer connections. Also, we are proposing to the Sewer Commission that priorities be established relating to the relative health risk for locations which may have the opportunity to connect to the new sewer systems going up in North and Central Cohasset.

When sewers were proposed for North Cohasset, homeowners with septics which met state Title 5 requirements, were given the option not to hook up to the sewer. We hope to reevaluate that option with a view to expanding it. Moreover, we would like to provide broader options for hookups and to provide guidance for more economical and practical wastewater options such as joint connections (several homes using one retaining tank and one grinder pump), joint use of efficient wastewater treatment facilities, etc., and other similar approaches to more efficient and economical connections to the sewer systems.

A recent visit to Gloucester by town officials, the Sewer Commission, and representatives of your Board of Health gave us a number of ideas for initiatives which may save money on sewer and other wastewater processing methods. Look at future Health Notes for more on this approach to our wastewater problems.

merable dedicated hours from its citizenry.

The Cohasset Sewage Commission is a non-salaried, tax-paying body elected by us all. One of them was just recently reelected. Two are equipped with extensive career experience in engineering, water problems and the necessary financing involved. How fortunate we are!

Yet, our selectmen and their legal advisor have interpreted a still debatable town meeting article in a way to cancel the jurisdiction of the commission which is well into a serious financial commitment based upon years of thorough and well-publicized study.

A very positive observation results from this unfortunate experience:

If we are to depend on capable volunteers to help run our town, we should not discourage this fortuitous resource by second-guessing and countermanding their studied decisions — and in this instance, let us rather salute and thank the sewage people for difficult and conscientious service.

Traffic on King Street

TO THE SELECTMEN:

I write (once again) concerning the matter of traffic on King Street. The recent accident, though a special incident, has focused the attention of residents on this matter, though we have been concerned for some time.

Some years ago, the residents came together and met with and petitioned the selectmen for attention to the traffic problem on the street. We were promised then, that heavy trucks would be excluded, and the street properly posted for speed limits.

Neither of these promises has as yet been acted upon. Large trucks still use the street; and there are no speed-limit signs on the entire length of the street (a couple for "children," and one for "road narrows."

At the time of meeting with the selectmen, the residents arranged to have an article in the Town Meeting warrant, to make King Street one way, at least from Pond Street to 3A. But this was defeated.

In earlier correspondence, I have suggested "speed bumps" at strategic locations, which we have observed in use and effective in other communities and towns elsewhere.

The police have watched on the street from time to time, and we appreciate that effort. But they have not been here usually, at peek traffic times — early morning rush and later afternoon for coming home.

The most noticeable, for us at least, is that the traffic "whips" over the hill (somewhat past the Bailey residence), and then "flies" down toward the lights at 3A. This area has become in effect a real "speedway!"

PLEASE, give some attention to this matter. We surely don't want to wait for some accident, to alert our officials to the matter!

CANDIDATES CORNER

Tebbetts to chair Cutler campaign

Longtime Cohasset resident and former State Senate candidate Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts will serve as chairperson of the Josh Cutler campaign.

Tebbetts has been an activist and community educator for 25 years in the areas of housing, education, legislative reform, energy policy, fiscal policy and waste management. Tebbetts was a volunteer staff member of the original South Weymouth Naval Air Station Study Committee. She is a member and past chairwoman and treasurer of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee, and active in the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus and Emily's List. Tebbetts is a member of the Hingham League of Women Voters, and has been a league member for 30 years. She has also been active in the First Parish Church Cohasset and is currently chairperson of the Social Concerns/Outreach Committee.

Tebbetts is married to Edwin Tebbetts, a former chairman of the Cohasset Board of Selectman. She holds a bachelor's degree from Wellesley College and a certificate from the Program for Women in Politics and Public Policy of the McCormack Institute, UMass/Boston.

Tebbetts joins a growing campaign staff, which includes campaign manager Ann Marie Farrell, town coordinator Melissa Buis, and treasurer Suzanne Cutler, all of Hingham.

Cutler is a democratic candidate for state representative for the Third Plymouth District, which includes the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Cutler is running to bring a proactive voice to the State Legislature on issues such as education reform, environmental protection and health care reform. Little known trivia from 1776

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Would it hurt you to learn, on the eve of the 222nd Fourth Of July, that none of the Founding Fathers really enjoyed splitting a flagon of nut brown ale with John Adams?

"He is vain, irritable, and a bad calculator of the force and probable effect of the motives which govern men," said Tom Jefferson, who is often described as John's close friend.

"Well-known are his disgusting egotism, distempered jealousy, ungovernable indiscretions and vanity without bounds," added Alexander Hamilton, who later died in a duel for saying similar things about Aaron Burr.

"It has been the political career for this man to begin with hypocrisy, proceed with arrogance and finish with contempt." wrote Tom Paine, who dealt more gently with George III of England.

It was Richard Henry Lee, the delegate from Virginia, who offered the motion for independence in the Continental Congress on June 6, 1776. It was tabled, then revived in a ground swell of public support.

The Congress on June 11 named a committee of five — Adams, Jefferson, Ben Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston — to write a rough draft of the declaration.

The committee treated their assignment like a black bean. Jefferson proposed that Adams handle it Adams turned down the honor.

"I am obnoxious, suspected and unpopular," said Adams, who showed himself the be a keen judge of men. ""You are much otherwise. You can write 10 times better than I."

Jefferson produced a declaration of 1,817 carefully chosen words. Then the congressmen had a crack at it. They made 66 changes and cut 480 words, which the proud author referred to as "mutilations."

His original draft accused George III of hiring "Scotch and other foreign mercenaries," which was quickly erased at the horrified urging of Jim Wilson and John Witherspoon, natives of Scotland.

And when he accused George III forcing slavery on the oppressed colonists, that was dumped when Georgia and South Carolina threatened to to pull out of the convention.

Not everyone liked it.

"There is not an idea in it but what had been hackneyed in Congress for two years before," sniffed John Adams.

"I did not consider it as any part of my charge to invent new ideas altogether," replied Jefferson.

Lee's resolve for independence was finally passed 12-0, with New York abstaining, on July 2, formally read on July 3 and passed on to the printer.

The printer, one John Dunlap, promptly lost the original document but fortunately a copy was made first and that is the document that is in the National Archives right now.

The actual signing was on Aug. 2 after Congress had ordered a parchment copy made. Last to sign was Thomas McKean of Delaware. He was on duty with Washington's army in July, 1776. He finally signed in 1781.

The names of those who signed the declaration were not revealed for nearly a year, despite the fact that the home office in Old Blighty was offering a $2,500 reward for the identities.

The Brits had declared that just signing the document was an act of high treason, punishable by death.

Benjamin Harrison of Virginia, who rarely missed a meal, joked about it with his skinny colleague from Massachusetts, Elbridge Gerry.

"When the hanging comes," he said, "it will be over with me in a minute but you will be kicking the air for an hour after I'm gone."

The average Englishman couldn't care less.

The Declaration of Independence got six lines below the fold in the London Morning Post.

Rep. Hynes takes aim at party hosts

New bill requires adults to be responsible for minors

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

In response to the drunk driving death of a Marshfield teen two summers ago, state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, has filed legislation to prevent future tragedies of this kind by obligating party hosts to take action against underage drinking.

The bill Hynes has drafted, called the social host bill, amends the Massachusetts' law prohibiting the transferal of alcoholic beverages to minors.

The amendment obligates parents to supervise and control parties where alcohol is being served to make sure minors are not drinking.

"In some cases, parents look the other way," Hynes explained.

Under current law, conveying or delivering alcohol to persons under 21 is illegal but hosting a party where minors are present and consuming alcoholic beverages is not, Hynes pointed out.

"We need to tell kids who are under age that alcohol is illegal, unhealthy and if they drink and drive, there can be disastrous consequences," Hynes said.

He said parents would be required to "take reasonable action" against illegal consumption of alcohol. If not, they could face the same penalties associated with delivering alcohol to a minor: a $2,000 fine and/or six months in jail.

The amendment obligates parents to supervise and control parties where alcohol is being served to make sure minors are not drinking.

Making a public statement or posting a sign at a gathering reminding guests of state law would constitute taking a reasonable action, Hynes said.

Two years ago last week, 18-year-old Gregory D. Smith of Marshfield died in a drunk driving accident on the way home from a party in Cohasset. At the time of his death, Smith's blood alcohol level was .19. The legal limit for those under 21 is .02. The legal limit for drivers over the age of 21 is .08.

Marshfield Police estimated Smith was traveling 56 miles per hour before his Chevrolet Blazer crashed into a telephone pole on Summer Street.

Hynes said he believed the adult hosts of that party did not take adequate action to prevent teens from drinking at the party, which was a joint celebration for graduates from college as well as high school.

A jury acquitted party host John Lennon of Cohasset in 1997 for lack of evidence that he had served minors at the party.

Some underage witnesses testified that they had brought their own beer to the party while others said they drank from a keg on the Lennons' back porch in full view of a yard full of adults.

"There was an inference that the adults and the hosts knew there was drinking going on, but there's no penalty in the law unless you can prove there was delivery," Hynes said.

Smith had graduated from Thayer Academy in Braintree two weeks before the accident. He had received a scholarship to attend Norwich University in Vermont and planned to pursue a career in the military.

His father, Donald Smith, has been a strong advocate for Hynes' bill promoting social host responsibility.

"(Gregory) would want me to pursue this so no other young man has to leave this place without living a full life," he said Tuesday, the anniversary of his son's death. "I believe he's beside me."

Donald Smith said he does not want to see children stripped of their good judgment because adults have given them a false sense of security by condoning drinking. He said he has received many calls from people who also support the bill.

"The law is a must to make the kind of people who do this think twice before allowing it to happen," he said. "Some adults think they're doing the right thing, but they're sending kids off with the wrong impression. Kids have enough hurdles in life. They don't need additional hurdles. Letting other parents make decisions for your children is archaic and wrong."

Donald Smith posted a sign on the Summer Street telephone pole where Gregory lost his life two years ago.

"I hope nobody has to go through this pain we are going through," he said. "It was an abrupt end and a devastation that will never leave us. It's been difficult to even face the next day."

In Pennsylvania, state legislators enacted a series of laws against underage drinking that included penalties against social hosts. That series of laws resulted in a 27 percent decline in alcohol related deaths of minors.

The law made it a misdemeanor to "sell or furnish" alcoholic beverages to a minor. Pennsylvania's crimes code defines the word "furnish" as: "To supply, give or provide to, or to allow a minor to possess on premises or property owned or controlled by the person charged."

CHL asks court to overturn Area V expansion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill are going to court once again to keep alive their proposed Area V expansion of the facility. The health board rejected the expansion more than two years ago, a decision which CHL appealed to Norfolk Superior Court. Last April, Superior Court Judge Isaac Borenstein upheld the health board's decision. CHL attorney Anton Moehrke has asked the state Appeals Court to overturn Borenstein's decision.

This latest development is just one in a series of maneuvers by the owners of the landfill, Paul and John Barry, to stay open, expand the facility and defy shut-down orders. CHL has delayed two court dates in Quincy District Court on a request by Building Inspector Robert Egan to file criminal charges against CHL for defying a shut-down order. Egan ordered the landfill closed for a permit violation. Also, CHL has taken the town to land court in an attempt to overturn that order.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), said the latest appeal is just another futile attempt by CHL to expand the operation.

"This gives them one thin ray of hope to save their expansion," McNabb said. "As far as I'm concerned, the Area V expansion is dead as a door nail unless they are the recipients of some sort of miracle. CHL is just wasting everyone's time and money by continuing this charade."

Meanwhile, McNabb said the Department of Environmental Protection has projected that CHL would close on June 30 (Tuesday). The facility was still open on July 1.

"CHL must have finally reached their maximum approved height of 190 feet above sea level," McNabb wrote in a press release. "This is a legal requirement that CHL cannot get around— once they reach their maximum permitted height, CHL's DEP operating permit becomes invalid, forcing them to close."

In a letter dated Dec. 12, 1997, from CHL's engineer, A. Raymond Quinn, to DEP, he states that as of January, 1997, CHL had enough height left to accept 45,000 tons of material. As of October 1997, CHL had accepted an additional 29,229 tons of material, leaving it with room for an additional 15,771 tons of material. McNabb said that CHL's own reports show that it accepted more than 21,000 tons of material between October, 1997 and May, 1998. Additionally, the health board has discovered that CHL illegally overfilled the slopes of the landfill with as much as 140,000 tons of material.

At a recent health board meeting, owner Paul Barry said that he had submitted drawings of the slopes to DEP on time every month as required by law. Barry pointed out that DEP never disputed the height of the slopes. He told the health board that in the day to day operations at the landfill he eyeballed the slopes while depositing material to monitor their height.

CHL had also asked the state to approve a 20-foot vertical expansion, but Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe said DEP could approve that request only if CHL removed material it illegally dumped in a part of the landfill, Area IV-B, not approved for landfilling. Coxe also required all of CHL's permits to be in good standing for the vertical expansion to proceed.

However, CHL still has not fulfilled Coxe's conditions for the vertical expansion. Egan ordered the landfill to shut down because former owner James Tyeryar never filed a special permit issued in 1978 with the Registry of Deeds. The Barrys also failed to file the permit when they bought the landfill. State law says that permits not filed with the Registry of Deeds are invalid. Egan ruled that the invalid permit meant CHL could not claim pre-existing status in the town's water protection district, which was created in 1987 and prohibits landfills. CHL believed it had a valid special permit and had the right to claim "grandfathered" status in the district.

In addition to the permit issue, CHL still has not removed the material from Area IV-B. CHL is still in discussions with the health board about what to do with the material. CHL has maintained that removing the material could be harmful to the environment.

The health board is planning to hold site assignment hearings to determine whether to modify or rescind CHL's right to operate a landfill in town. Health board members agreed to hold the hearings at SAFE's request because of CHL's numerous violations.

Liquor license denial challenged

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Verc Mobil on Sohier Street is appealing the selectmen's decision denying its request for a liquor license.

Selectmen held public hearings on the matter on May 18 and June 15.

They were cool to the proposal because Police Chief Brian Noonan was against granting the license.

In denying the request, selectmen also said there was no need for an additional liquor license in town, especially along Route 3A whose Cohasset section includes two package stores, a convenience store and a fish market that sell alcohol.

In a letter to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC) in Boston, Richard A. Henderson - the attorney for Verc Enterprises, Inc. - said there are licenses available because Cohasset has not issued the maximum number of beer and wine licenses for a town of its population.

Henderson pointed out that the police chief did not appear at either hearing although he had sent a letter to selectmen detailing a number of complaints that had been received by police with respect to loitering and/or other disturbances at the site.

"Evidence offered by the petitioner later in the hearing confirmed that all of these complaints were initiated by the petitioner itself," Henderson wrote.

Verc Mobil owner, Paul Vercollone, said at the hearings that the complaints were generated by store employees who were following the company policy of not allowing groups and cars to congregate there.

Henderson said two petitions were presented to selectmen — one signed by about 100 residents and another by about 100 non residents — indicating it would be convenient for Verc Mobil to sell beer and wine.

Vercollone also offered evidence with respect to the experience of the manager to operate a retail outlet as well as his background in the alcoholic beverage industry.

"The petitioner demonstrated the moral quality, the business experience and the responsibility to be allowed to sell beers and wines at retail," Henderson said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said selectmen, who are the licensing authority, are under no obligation to issue liquor licenses.

"The license is not a right," he said.

Capt. Morgan keeps those burgers coming

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Hugh Morgan has very little time during the summer months to peek out the small window behind him onto the neatly manicured grass and take in the action at the Harold F. Barnes Field. A few free moments to yourself can be all the tougher to find when you have a line of hungry Cohasset Youth Baseball League fans looking to dig into your piping hot hamburgers, sausages and chicken fingers between innings.

Morgan, though, does his best to follow at least snippets of the action.

"In between burgers I try to catch a batter or two," said Morgan, "but sometimes it just gets too busy."

And as if he isn't busy enough with the baseball fans at the field, there are other orders to be filled. "I have neighbors who call in for a sandwich and come over," he said.

Such are the summers for the man known lovingly by the kids around town as "Captain."

Morgan has been running the concession stand, aptly named "Captain Morgan's Dugout Galley" for the past four years. And despite the long days and hectic pace that comes with the job, Morgan looks forward to every new season as much as the kids who take to the field.

"I love it and look forward to it every year," said Morgan, who drives a school bus the rest of the year. "It's very rewarding. There's a lot of work involved, but people get a good value."

Hugh Morgan, AKA The Captain, serves food up hot and fresh at the Barnes Field concession stand.

From April through mid-August, the "Galley" is Morgan's second home. Weekends are the longest and most taxing. Morgan arrives at the stand no later than 7:30 a.m. on Saturdays and preps the various items on the menu for what can be up to a 13-hour day. His Sundays begin at noon and end at 8 or 9 that night. Weekdays are a little more forgiving with Morgan running the Galley from 5 to 8:45 p.m.

The amount of food the spectators put away is staggering. During some weeks, up to 130 pounds of chicken fingers are devoured. Morgan has also averaged 150 pounds of french fries and 150 more of popcorn per season over the four years.

The people he meets, both young and old, make Morgan's job all the more satisfying. When you're dealing with as many people as Morgan is, after all, a people person is a prerequisite for the job.

"I love all the kids there," he said. "I know most of them anyway from driving the bus."

He also has a great deal of respect for the league officials and is impressed with the commitment and care they take for every youngster who dons a little league uniform in Cohasset. Morgan has seen, firsthand, the league's leadership grow over the past several seasons.

"I can't say enough for the board of directors, [President] Dan Leahy and the job they all do for the kids," he said.

Morgan's involvement with the league began innocently enough. He took over the concession stand when some little league parents approached him while selling hot dogs at Sandy Beach. They asked Morgan if he'd be interested in the job and he jumped at the chance. Since then he has added sausages and chicken fingers to his menu and collected more than a fair share of priceless memories.

Morgan kiddingly told one woman who ordered chicken fingers that they were all out. Instead, he recommended she and her children sample the "rooster tails," assuring the group they were just as tasty as the more familiar order. Rooster tails never have.

Having a ball with lacrosse

Sport continues to grow in Cohasset

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

How to explain lacrosse in 15 words or less, by Chuck Jaffe.

"It is basketball's offense with hockey's action in a game played on a soccer field."

Any questions?

It is the exciting action as well as the contact inherent to the game that seems to be drawing kids of all ages to lacrosse, the fastest growing game on two feet right now in the country.

"I think kids like the contact as well as the fact that it's the type of game where you are always moving," said Jaffe, a New Jersey native who played the game up and down the Eastern seaboard before settling down in Cohasset. "It's a really fun game to play."

You wouldn't find many to disagree with his assessment at the lacrosse camp that Jaffe is currently running on Monday evenings with the Cohasset recreation department.

"I really like the contact," said 10-year-old Zach Markert, who plays the grueling midfielder position where he is expected to have an impact on both the offensive and defensive parts of the game. "This is a lot more exciting than some of the other games that you can play."

"Hitting people is the best part of the game," admitted Michael Devlin, who plays at the attack forward spot. "Scoring goals is pretty awesome, too."

"It's a game of adrenaline. A lot of the other sports the kids are playing are fairly sedentary most of the time, but lacrosse is a game of action. If you're doing it right you are always moving in one manner or another. It's an up-and-down game and I think that's what the kids find most exciting about the game."
LACROSSE COACH KEN EKBERG

For John Lowe, Monday evening was his first foray into the world of lacrosse.

"A lot of my friends are playing the game and I decided to give it a shot," said the ten-year-old. "I think it's a pretty cool sport. I'm ready to play wherever they decide to put me."

Lacrosse is not without its critics, though, as some wonder if even the players and the officials know why the whistle is blown at times.

For the uninitiated, here's a quick refresher course. Although men and women use the same name for the game, there are some differences.

There are ten players in a boys game: usually one goalie, three defenseman, three midfielders and three attackmen. The girls play with eleven aside.

Equipment differs also with men wearing padding that covers most of the body from the waist up while the ladies are required to wear safety goggles and a mouth guard.

What is the same, though, is the action that goes along with the games that are filled with offensive rushes similar to those of hockey as well as the more precise set-up or motion offense styles you might see on the basketball court.

As for the aforementioned hitting that goes along with the game, it's heavy but well-regulated. You can only hit a player who either has the ball or is within five yards of a loose ball with a check from the side or the front between the knees and the shoulders.

Coach Chuck Jaffe offers pointers on the game of lacrosse to some eager youngsters Monday evening in a program sponsored by the Cohasset recreation department.

Local resident Ken Ekberg is credited as being the founding father of lacrosse in Cohasset, retiring as the varsity coach at the high school before last season. Ekberg recorded more than 100 wins in his career and picked up an award for being the coach of the year in the Pilgrim Conference.

His team went 15-2 in his last year at the helm and were ranked #10th in Eastern Mass polls.

"It's a game of adrenaline," said Ekberg, who coached at the youth league level this season. "A lot of the other sports the kids are playing are fairly sedentary most of the time, but lacrosse is a game of action. If you're doing it right you are always moving in one manner or another. It's an up-and-down game and I think that's what the kids find most exciting about the game."

nor never will be on the Galley's menu, but the woman decided to give them a try anyway, not knowing they were chicken fingers.

Morgan proved to be very convincing.

"She took them of course," Morgan said with a laugh. "She was pretty gullible but a very nice lady. We have a lot of fun there."

Morgan has a pair of two young workers, Brendan and Jeff Barrett, whom he relies on when it comes to picking out candy and the flavors of slush to sell. "I take them with me when I go to the wholesaler," Morgan said. "They know better than me what kind of candy is popular with the kids."

Morgan said he is very fond of the two boys and got them T-shirts, one with "CEO" printed on it and the other with "President."

"They're very trustworthy, good kids," Morgan said. "And they work very hard."

There is a "possibility" Morgan will be working the concession stand at Milliken Field on Saturdays this fall during the youth soccer season. He's considering the job now and will make a decision in the coming weeks.

For now, however, there are plenty of mouths to feed near the baseball diamond. The busiest time at the Galley comes when a game ends. The crowd at the window can be so great, Morgan said, he'll take orders and give people their food and change without even looking up.

"On a hot summer night with no air conditioning it's very hot," Morgan said, then added half-kiddingly, "Seven days I'm down there. I look for a rainy day once in a while. But my main concern is the kids and they are taken care of."

Morgan vowed to himself when he began running the Galley that no one would ever leave the field hungry. As long as he is running the concession stand it doesn't matter if a person is a quarter short or flat out broke, Morgan takes care of him.

"They don't go away hungry," he said. "I've known some of these kids since kindergarten."

After all, those are the "Captain's" orders and he's in charge of this galley.

more than a decade ago, lacrosse is now an athletic endeavor that more than one local student has ridden to a Division 1 college on sports scholarship and is now more than ever a major factor when it comes to sports choices and getting the top athletes to take up the game.

"Even though we are the smallest school with a lacrosse program in the state, we are sending kids to big schools on athletic scholarships," said Jaffe while pointing out that one of his assistants at the camp, Ken Leahy, would be a junior captain in September at Providence College.

And he is not alone.

Jon Lacks joins him at P.C.

Ely Kahn is playing goalie at Harvard.

Ben Redfield was an all New England selection at Roger Williams University.

Jaffe points to the popularity of the junior lacrosse program in Cohasset as proof that the best may still be yet to come. Jaffee and Bob Inman ran the youth program this season.

"The game is growing everywhere you look," added Ekberg. "Every time that you turn around another school is looking to add it on."

In fact, said Ekberg, with the proliferation of youth leagues, high school teams and semi-pro teams, one of the biggest problems the sport now faces is not having enough qualified people to officiate the games.

Jaffe points out that the lacrosse bug has not bitten just the male members of the population. The fairer sex has jumped on the bandwagon as well.

"Everyone seems to be getting into the act, both boys and girls, which I this is great for the game," said Jaffe. "I remember everyone had their hands in the huddle once and the top hand had purple nail polish on it. That takes you back for a second, but it just shows you how the game is growing."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The seemingly endless array of nutritional studies in recent years is adding to the evidence that what we eat and drink greatly influences the health of our bodies. Whether we are talking about vitamins and minerals or phytochemicals, food helps the body fend off disease and preserve health. This comes as no surprise to chiropractors who have steadfastly maintained that the body's innate intelligence for preserving its health is bolstered by unimpeded nerve function and adherence to good nutrition and regular exercise. To this end, chiropractors are as well-trained in good nutritional practice as they are in administering spinal adjustments, and patients are encouraged to see chiropractors as much for nutritional counseling as for back pain.

At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we feel the key factors to health are balanced nutrition, exercise, peace of mind, reduced stress, adequate rest, and a sound nervous system. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we have complete facilities and equipment available to determine if your condition may be helped through chiropractic. Stop living with pain! Call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Our concern is your health. I offer presentations on such import topics as "Raising a Healthy Drug-Free Family," "Back Safety in the Workplace," "Stress Reduction," and "Meeting the HealthCare Crisis Head-on." Call to find out more.

P.S. While the notion was met with a great deal of skepticism when it was first postulated 20 years ago, few now question vitamin C's role in promoting health and fending off conditions ranging from cancer to cataracts.

Cohasset men's softball league

After two weeks of play the Cohasset men's softball league looks like it's off to another fun year. the errors are abundant, the waistlines are extended and the laughs are reaching record pace.

The Cell Boys pulled off a triple play at sunny Beechwood ball park, but they lost 18-1! Jim Gordon of the Dog Pound hit a towering home run into Magee's yard nut they lost 13-4! Young Timmy Farrell was seen swinging a bat with Conor Dooley even though Timmy had a cast on his broken arm.

All in all it was an entertaining week for the players, wives and kids.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the front field of Cohasset High School.

For brochures and registration forms, come to the Cohasset Recreation Department office, first floor, Town Hall.

Rainy days and skeeters always get me down

My wife swirled out the door, kiss damp on her cheek, with daughter number one in tow. The ladies were off to another day of toil as I settled into the chair to bring you the latest in fishing activity in and around the South Shore.

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

The fresh cup of coffee rattled from a close shot of thunder and the heavens opened, again. As I scanned my notes, the rain pelted the house with a dull roar. I glanced at the clock and got up to double-check windows, doors and skylights; it was 8:03 a.m.

Passing by my daughters' room I saw water cascading down the screen of the deck door. My anxiety heightened as I realized the gutters had not yet been cleaned. After a hunt for the step ladder, I spent the next few hours perched around the corners of the house, soaked through and through. I peeled my sodden clothing on the deck and eyed the rain gauge as I hung them dripping over the line.

Four-and-one-half inches! My eyes popped. I had just emptied it last night! The clock read 11:30 a.m. as I spattered my way back indoors. What is going on with the weather?

Telegram: DEAR PRESIDENT<stop>HOPE YOU ARE ENJOYING TRIP<stop>EASTERN SEABOARD SUFFERING CHINESE WATER TORTURE IT SEEMS<stop>PLEASE COMPEL PRES J ZEMIN TO CEASE AND DESIST<stop>Signed Soggy Summerlover.

Though the weather is starting to take on the look of a Biblical plague, there are anglers getting their time in between monsoons and mosquito typhoons. Note: planning on being outdoors? Be ready for the skeeters. In areas that drain large volumes of these warm tropical rains, the adjacent fishing areas seem to be doing very well.

From Wessagusset to World's End, Cohasset Harbor and the nearby ledges, the North River from Mary's Boat Livery downstream and out to the Bell, the South River, Green Harbor and the Creek, from Howlands Landing out to and beyond Browne's Bank, and from the outlet of the Eel River in Plymouth the fish are hitting bait and trolled lures and quite a variety of spoons, flies and plugs.

Dan Collins selected a new spinning rig with a Penn 704 and promptly christened it upstream from Mill Bridge with a 36-inch striper. "Difficult fight in that current?" "Sure was," Dan replied. Several days later the big one went over the falls. SNAP!

Next trip Dan and Andy took the skiff out for a rock and roll tour just outside the harbor. The snotty conditions kept most people at their moorings. They towed redhead CD 18 Rapalas and hoochies and found themselves tangled with some battling bluefish.

Dan's went 12 pounds, Andy's 8. Perfect size for grilling.

Meanwhile, back in the harbor, the new retiree, Cliff Jones, was on a roll. Striper after striper banged his squid pieces over a two-and-a-half hour period. The 36-incher he brought in was destined for fine cuisine.

The cuisine was disappearing fast at Jamie's Pub the other night when we got to talking about how persistent the fog had been. Jamie had flown to the Hamptons the previous day to meet Roland Nasrey and Roland's new 46' Post.

Roland was on the final leg of a run from Florida to Weymouthport. The conditions were gorgeous according to Jamie as they crossed by Block Island and into Buzzards Bay.

As we came out of the end of the canal, it was like we hit a wall of fog. It was getting dark and to compound things all the navigational instruments, radar, loran and GPS decided to quit all at once. "We were out in the bay," said Jamie, "but we didn't have any idea where we were after that." So they inched their way on a northerly course for a couple of hours and when they figured they were off Scituate called the Coast Guard for advice.

The Coast Guard located them using radio direction finding equipment and dispatched SeaTow to guide them in, from just east of Graves Ledges! All's well when things end well.

Back to the blues. Several anglers reported having the line part on them, including Harry, fishing from the Government Island float. Time to remember to bring along some wire leaders and wire snelled hooks. Don Schneider reported a hard fighting fish stripped his spool nearly empty before the line parted. Don's having a good spring, catching numerous fish on almost every trip.

Kevin Callahan hauled back on a big boy. Using a tube and seaworm rig, Kevin was on a 27-pound 8-ounce bass that taped out at 42 inches! Nice. "Righty" Sullivan of Scituate, a disciple of flyfishing guru "Lefty" Kreh, flipped a chartreuse Deceiver into the briny at the Scituate Harbor Jetty and brought in a keeper. John Villarde took some time off from his duties as chef and haunted the shores of the canal near the Bourne Bridge. John caught and released a slew of bass and blues, the largest 38 inches.

A nearby angler captured a 44-inch bass from the swift current. Must have seemed like a 60. Ted Abbadessa used his trademark pogie to capture a 24-pounder early in the week and was back with another in a couple of days. A mackerel chunk was gulped by a 32-1/2 pound bass around the rocks north of Allerton. Nice fish.

Michelle LeMaire, age 10, of Cohasset, hauled in her first keeper of the season on a mackerel chunk. Squirrel brought in a fine bass for the shop-bound anglers to enjoy. Jim Hearn was seen hauling a 38-inch bass up the beach in Minot.

Over at Aaron River Reservoir Anthony Wigmore's shiner was gobbled by a 4-pound 4-ounce bass. Tim Pilzcak used his shiners efficiently catching 32 fish on 36 shiners. "What happened with the other four shiners?" Harry teased. "I think the trees got them." Tim smiled.

On the sweetwater trail, Chris Trachik of Scituate bagged an eating-size calico on a rubber worm at Tack Pond. Meanwhile, across the street, Fisherman Jack finally captured the big one. Brushy Hill gave up a 6-pound largemouth to Jack's blackback Rebel.

As Jack was swapping fish stories with another angler, the trunk closed with an exaggerated click. Yes, the keys were still inside. That's another story.

Catch one that is hard to carry!

Maryland carillonneur to play at Cohasset

The second program in the 74th Annual Series of Summer Carillon Recitals at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, will be given Sunday evening, July 5, by John Widmann, city carillonneur of Frederick, Md. Widmann will play original carillon pieces by Gary White, Albert Gerken, Allan Ontko and Ronald Barnes, as well as arrangements of familiar folk songs, show and film tunes, transcriptions of works by Mendelssohn and Faure, and patriotic music of several countries.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. Listeners are encouraged to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnics. In case of rain, the carillon may be heard from parked cars. Printed programs, concert schedules and descriptive brochures will be available, both in a stand near the church courtyard on Highland Avenue, and will also be handed out on the Common and at other listening locations listed on the back of the program. Following the recital, a tour of the tower and demonstration of the carillon will be offered for those interested in climbing the 45 steps to the instrument.

For more information, call Sally Slade Warner, St. Stephen's carillonneur, at (978) 475-2599, Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur, at (781) 383-9599, or the church office at (781) 383-1083.

MEETING THE GOVERNOR

Martin St. John of Cohasset, whose great, great, great grandfather married one of the survivors of the Irish Brig, St. John, was one of the readers of the eight narrative plaques at the Irish Famine Memorial in Boston, Sunday, June 28. Martin and Gov. Paul Cellucci are standing in front of the beautiful bronze memorial.

Summer programs at Paul Pratt Memorial Library

All children are invited to participate in the statewide summer reading program, "Unlock the Mystery — Read!" This program begins Friday, June 19, and goes through the summer. It is not necessary to sign up, just come to the library and begin reading. Children record books as they read during the summer on cards or in log books supplied by the library. For each five books recorded and turned in to the library, a "Key" is added to the reader's "keyring" on display in the library. Those who read 20 books will be awarded a free paperback book. All participants will receive a certificate at the end of the summer. Also available are coupons for reduced admissions to a variety of Massachusetts cultural and recreational institutions, generous supporters of the state summer reading program.

The library will also offer a "Twilight Hour" story hour for younger children, ages 3 and up and their families. This will be held Tuesday evenings at 7 p.m., July 21, 28 and Aug. 4 and 11. No registration is required.

There will also be two special programs during the summer. Bob E. Thomas, storyteller and dancer, will present "The Animals Danced" Tuesday, July 14, at 7 p.m. at the library. This program is for all ages and admission is free.

The second program will be presented by Alicia Quintano, a storyteller, who will perform "The Mysterious Stranger" and other stories Aug. 20 at 7 p.m. at the library. This program is for ages 9 and under, and admission is free.

Both of these special programs are sponsored by the Cohasset Cultural Council, the Massachusetts Cultural Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

For more information, call the library at 383-1348.

Osgood School ceiling chunk caves in

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A chunk of ceiling caved in at the Osgood School June 24 raining plaster and debris down a hallway near the cafeteria. No one was injured, but children had been playing in the area minutes before the 10-foot section of the canopy crashed down.

"It's amazing my kids weren't standing there," said parent Janyce Brown. "They would have been in the hospital if they had been." Brown was in school with her children to help teachers pack up supplies for the coming move to the new elementary school. The episode made her wonder if school authorities knew how bad conditions were.

The school department is charged with taking care of maintenance in the buildings. Public works chief Harold Litchfield said his department does no repairs on buildings. The town hires a contractor when work has to be done.

"They put it out to bid, or the janitors do it," Litchfield said. Though many other communities channel building maintenance through public works, Cohasset has not made a move to do so.

"It's coming," he predicted. "But it's not here yet."

School had closed for summer vacation before the cave in. But while school was still in session, sections of the corridors were roped off because "little pieces of ceiling were falling down," Brown said.

The damage from a leak in the roof loosed the ceiling of the original gym and auditorium. Part of it dried out and fell through the drop ceiling 15 feet below it. The old ceiling has been covered up by a drop ceiling under it since the gym and meeting hall were converted to classrooms. Both the plaster and pieces of the drop ceiling landed on the floor.

A confirmation about the ropes came from schools superintendent Stephen Hart, but the halls were cordoned off only on the last day of school, he said.

The old ceiling has been covered up by a drop ceiling under it since the gym and meeting hall were converted to classrooms. Both the plaster and pieces of the drop ceiling landed on the floor.

Hart doubted the cave in would affect the sale of the Osgood School building. The Osgood School building on Ripley Road is to be sold after the move to the new elementary building off Sohier Street.

Building Inspector Bob Egan said he inspected the school building before school started last September. He did not remember seeing anything dangerous about the original ceiling. It can be seen through an open section in the teacher's room upstairs.

"Sometimes things just happen," he said. However, Egan did remark about the condition of the windows.

"Over the years I've sent basically the same letter about deficiencies at the Osgood school. But with the new school opening, the maintenance was probably deferred even more."

$2K grant to kick off D&A help line

By Stacey K. Powers
CORRESPONDENT

A $2,000 grant from the Bell Atlantic Foundation was formally presented to the Drug & Alcohol Committee at the selectmen's meeting on Monday, June 29. The money will be used for costs related to establishing a drug and alcohol help line in the Social Service League office of St. Stephen's Church. The group announced its intention to create this community service in January and the grant will enable it to be up and running before the end of the summer.

Staffed by committee member Bob Harold, a professional drug and alcohol counselor, the help line will be open on Tuesday nights from 6 to 10 p.m. for substance abuse help. Citizens are encouraged to call in with any questions regarding substance abuse problems pertaining to the individual of family members. Any callers who need assistance outside those hours of operation can leave a confidential message which will be checked and returned by Harold on a regular basis.

The Rev. Cliff Cutler of St. Stephen's Church, who is chairman of the Drug and Alcohol Committee, accepted the $2,000 donation at the selectmen's meeting Monday from Robert C. Noble of Bell Atlantic.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, who helped start the original drug and alcohol committee when she was a Cohasset selectmen many years ago, approached Bell Atlantic for the donation.

"We need this more today than ever," Murray said.

Police marine patrols over holiday

Through boat patrols, police will keep a close watch on Bassings Beach off Cohasset Harbor over the holiday weekend, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

There will be no open fires and no camping allowed.

Jackson said grills will be allowed but campfires will not be permitted.

"We don't want to prevent anyone from enjoying the day with normal recreational activities," he said.

But in the past a lot of people have gathered at Bassings Beach where there have been disturbances, illegal fireworks, vandalism and underage drinking, Jackson said.

Seven Cohasset officers have been certified for boat patrols through a federal grant, he said.

Vandalism in pocket park

Selectman Nan Roth said there have been continued acts of vandalism in the park between French Memories and Tedeschis in the village including in Donna Green's garden.

She said although police have been asked to keep watch in the area, Roth wants parents to remind their children to be respectful of private and public property.

"It's unfortunate that it's happened here and we hope it stops," Roth said.

Police chief's contract renewed

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Monday that he has renewed Police Chief Brian Noonan's contract for another three years.

Noonan, who has served 20 years with the Cohasset Police Department — six as chief, is eligible for up to a five percent increase in each of the three years.

Noonan's salary is $59,000 effective July 1, which includes a 4.8 percent increase voted at town meeting. Haddad said he also increased Noonan's annual vacation from four weeks to five.

Village Farmers' Market open Thursdays

The Cohasset Village Farmers' Market will run every Thursday through Oct. 15, from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. The market once again takes place on Cohasset Common at the corner of South Main Street and Robert E. Jason Road in Cohasset Village.

The market sponsors different activities for families to enjoy including live folk music, cooking demonstrations, children's face painting, occasional pony rides and much more. Musicians and entertainers looking for free exposure are welcome.

The Cohasset Chamber is a sponsor of the Farmers' Market in its continuing effort to revitalize the Cohasset Village business district. The chamber invites all to the market and enjoy the fresh fruits, vegetables, herbs, plants, baked goods, jams and jellies, lobsters, fresh and dried flower bouquets, breads and much more. Set aside enough time to enjoy the music and visit the many shops throughout Cohasset Village and Harbor. If you would like more information, call or write the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, (781) 383-1010, P.O. Box 336, Cohasset, 02025.

CHL shuts down landfill operation

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Space constraints have forced Cohasset Heights Limited to shut down its landfill operations.

One of the owners of CHL, Paul Barry, confirmed that he stopped accepting refuse as of last Thursday, July 2. Barry confirmed that the landfill was pretty much out of space.

"It was at its end," Barry said.

This decision comes close on the heels of the formation of a sub-committee of town officials working with CHL to settle all outstanding legal issues, remediation matters and closure details. Health Board member Kevin Ulmer serves as chairman of the new sub-committee, which he said was formed by the board of selectmen after a recent selectmen's meeting. The CHL sub-committee met for the first time on July 1, in executive session only, just one day before CHL closed down.

"They [CHL] did stop accepting refuse last Thursday night," said CHL-attorney Anton Moehrke. "We are in discussions with the town to try and resolve outstanding issues. As part of the discussion, the town asked us to cease operations and we agreed. Frankly, we were rapidly running out of capacity, but the timing of the closing was an indication that we wanted to work with the town to resolve matters."

When asked whether CHL had closed down, Ulmer would only say that he "had heard that."

The sub-committee is made up of six members: Ulmer, Selectman Ronnie McMorris, former zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo, conservation committee chairman Jeff Waal, and water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. Ulmer said that all meetings between the sub-committee and CHL would be held in executive sessions because of outstanding lawsuits and several other legal matters.

Town Manager Mark Haddad and McNabb, who is also member of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), declined to comment on the work of the sub-committee, referring all questions to Ulmer.

"We don't want this to play out in the news-

Quonset huts condos are put off

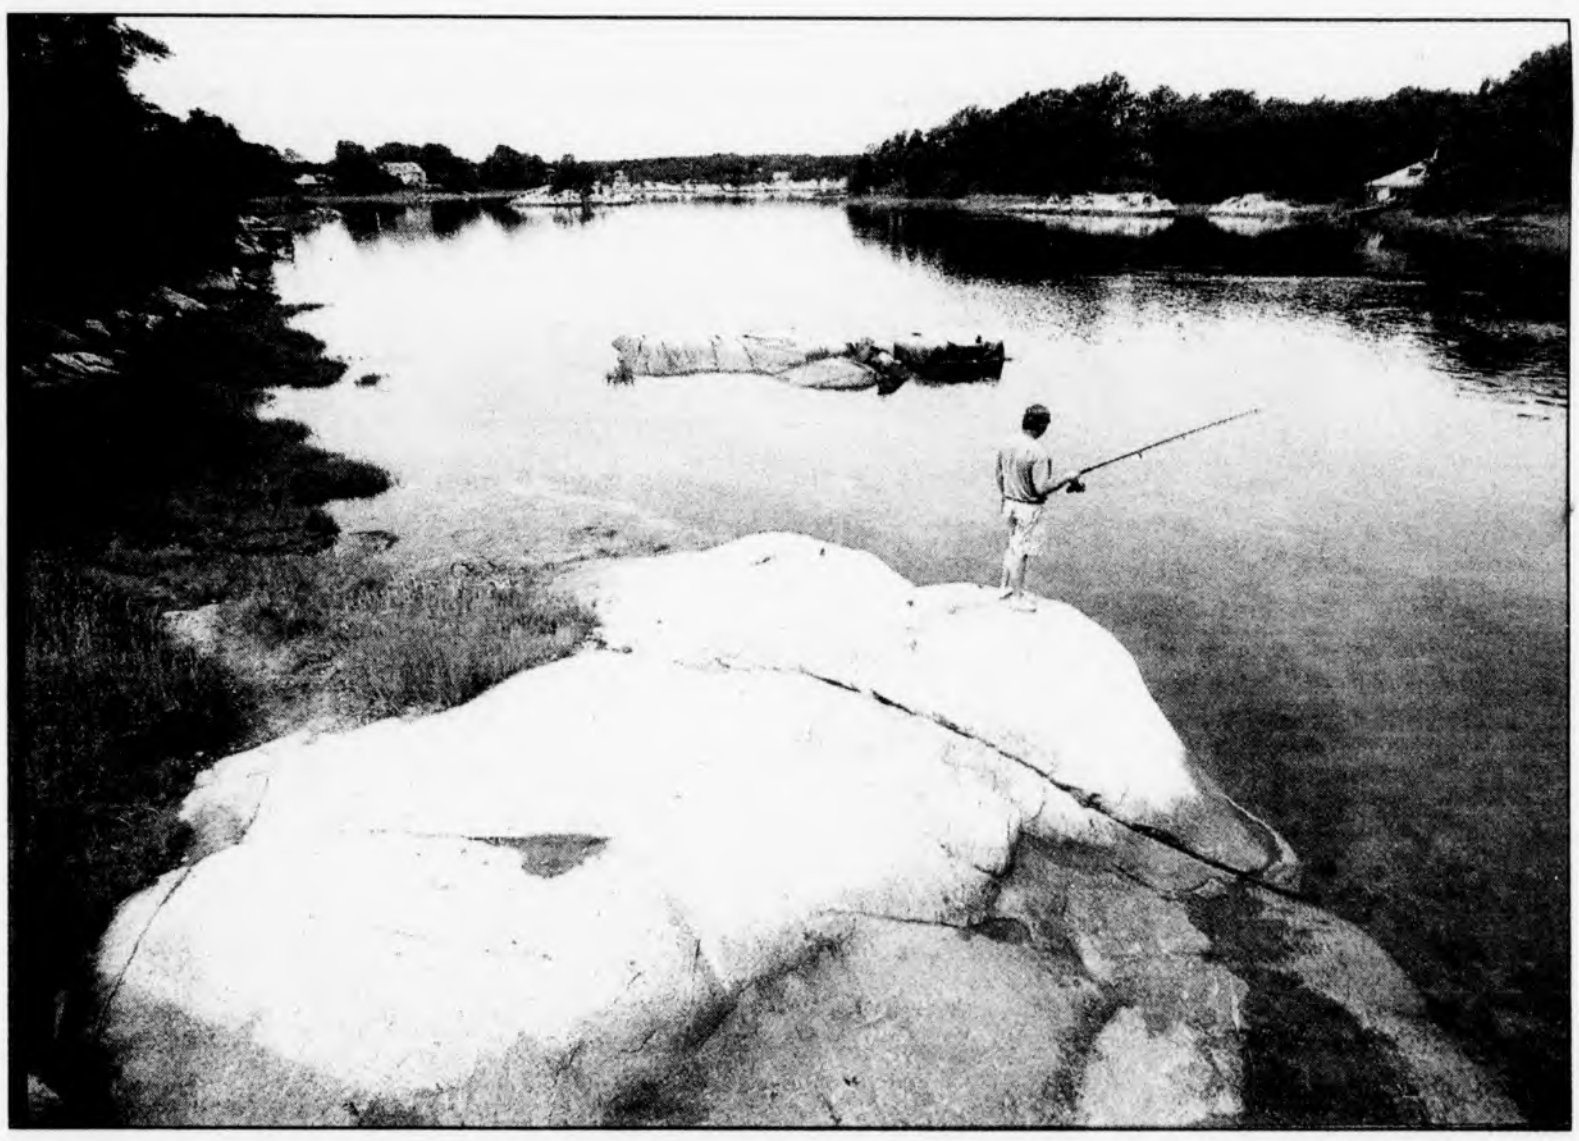
By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Abutters to the Quonset Huts at 430 S. Main St. are going to have to stare at the ugly structures a while longer.

The zoning board of appeals did not approve modifications to the design of five townhouse condominiums planned for the site this week.

"This (zoning board decision) puts everything on hold."

— John Murphy, builder



Instead, the board opted to send the plans to the design review board for input - a process which could delay the project for up to a month or more.

In the meantime, builder and owner John Murphy, who is carrying the loan for the property, would like to get rolling.

"I'm extremely disappointed," Murphy said in a telephone interview. "I understand the appeals board is acting on behalf of the town and abutters and will rely on the design review board which has the design and architectural background in dealing with these problems on

Town buildings rehab carries hefty price tag

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Money, a plan and time are what it will take to shore up five municipal buildings to last until the year 2025. Those are the conclusions of an independent report about the condition of public buildings here. According to KFP Associates of Weymouth, Cohasset needs to put up $15.2 million for special construction, if the town wants to prevent public buildings from crumbling. The town also must adopt a regular maintenance plan and phase in the repairs and renovations over 10 years.

Left out of the multimillion dollar grand total was money for normal upkeep, however. The estimate did cover contingency funds, payment to architects and administrative costs, reportedly 30 to 45 percent of the budget. It also reflected inflation at three percent.

KFP Associates sent three architects and two engineers to assess the situation at the Deer Hill School and the middle/high school, the Town Hall, the library and the police/fire station. Their audit "took the logical approach" and cataloged the projects to be undertaken, putting the most critical jobs in the first three years of the program. Architect Steven Devine summarized the findings. Architects Kenneth and Kevin Parry and engineers James Sullivan and Steven Karan also attended the Tuesday night meeting.

The most urgent repairs appeared to be needed at the middle/high school where $4.1 million could be spent over three years alone, with another $3 million spread out later. But the other projects followed the same pattern of spending most of the money early. In all, almost two-thirds of the $13.2 million would be paid out during the initial three years. At the Deer Hill School, the recommended schedule calls for spending about $3 million, with $1.8 million paid out in the first three years. The library repairs and upgrade were estimated at $2 million, while the Town Hall accounted for about $700,000 of the total and the police/fire station about $500,000.

Zoning rules and regulations

The zoning board upped its requirement for an engineering deposit from $1,000 to $2,000 for comprehensive permits, the board voted this week. The comprehensive permit - which streamlines the permitting process for developers who set aside a certain percentage of their housing units for affordable housing — involves an inordinate amount of paper work, clerk Barbara Power said

Zoning board reorganizes

Woody Chittick, 98 S. Main St., is the new chairman of the zoning board of appeals. Anson Whealler, 619 Jerusalem Road, is the vice chairman, and associate member Barbara Power, 74 Beach St. is the clerk. The board, which also consists of regular member Benjamin Lacy, 181 Jerusalem Road, and associate members, Jane Goedecke, 10 Nichols Road; Linda Hewitt Dick, 3 Arrowwood Road, elected its new officers Monday.

Music Circus sign gets nod

The zoning board approved a replacement sign for the Music Circus on Sohier Street this week. The new sign is smaller than the existing sign, clerk Barbara Power said.

"It's a handsome sign," said Power who saw the sign at Hassan's Signs off Route 3A.

Savings bank hours posted

The zoning board had no objections to the posting of the hours of operation of the Abington Savings Bank in a 2 ft. by 15 in. area on the entrance doors to Shaw's supermarket.

White letters painted on the glass door will tell shoppers the lobby hours of the bank which is housed inside the Route 3A supermarket.

Work on veterans memorial

Austin L. Ahearn wrote to selectmen that Cohasset Historical Military Memorial, Inc. voted at its last meeting to proceed with the honor rolls at Veterans Memorial Park. The group plans to install honor rolls with names of the veterans of World War I, Korea and Vietnam. The group installed the World War II Memorial several years ago but the memorial was the subject of controversy because it excluded the names of soldiers who served in the occupational forces. Selectmen have said those names must be added to the memorial.

Village street realignment

The Town of Cohasset will be temporarily changing the roadway configuration at the intersection of Elm Street and South Main Street in Cohasset Village from Monday, July 13 through Saturday, July 19.

The purpose of this re-alignment is to monitor the impacts this proposed design change may have on vehicle and pedestrian traffic flow and to solicit public comments. This road re-alignment is proposed as part of the project to establish a new walkway along South Main Street from Robert E. Jason Road to the intersection of Elm Street. This project is a result of a $165,900 Transportation Enhancement Grant awarded to the town by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

Public input and comments are sought regarding this intersection design change, as well as on the entire project. Please send your comments to The Village Task Force Committee, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, Mass. 02025. The Village Task Force Committee will be conducting a public forum to review the project on Thursday, July 30 at 7:30 p.m. in the town hall auditorium.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library:

Part of public tradition and private memories

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

These days when Dick Hayes looks over the building where he spent 29 years as head librarian, he measures the polished wood arches and columns in the reading room and sees "old charm" and a place lawyers will like. The unsentimental Hayes, who recently retired as director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, says the 95-year old building would make a great spot for a law firm or a doctor's office. But he doubts it should serve as a library anymore. Before he stepped down last month, he came out for moving the library to a new location, hopefully the Osgood School on Ripley Road. That building will be empty next September when the new elementary school opens. Since Joseph Osgood actually started the town's first public library, a move there will be like going back to roots.

The first public library in town was housed 120 years ago in two rooms at the town hall. Paul Pratt, "one of those inspired far-sighted individuals," wanted the library to have a building of its own. He left money in his will and directions to his daughters who both served as library trustees. The yellow brick building on South Main Street was constructed in 1903, and the town did not pay anything to get it built, said Hayes. And though it was designed after the best architecture of the early 20th century, the Paul Pratt is no longer the most suitable type of place to put a library.

"It's time to move on," he said earlier. "This building has served the town very well for 95 years. That's a good life for a building in this remarkable century."

Patience Towle and the other Library Trustees have been leaning in the direction of moving the library, perhaps to the Osgood School after it is vacant. In a way it comes down to a choice between time spent bringing a first-rate service to the public or time spent "scraping mildew and calling plumbers." But it is still not an easy decision to give up a building that is part of public tradition and private memories. Though small, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is very much a public edifice. Outside, the clipper ship clock and the mackerel weathervane seem to hail the past Cohasset where the shipping and fishing industries were once strong. The library has a rotunda with murals depicting scenes from the past, such as the harbor and the granting of land deeds. There are two reading rooms off the center, a design similar to many of the nation's public libraries financed by Carnegie. There are small details too, Towle said.

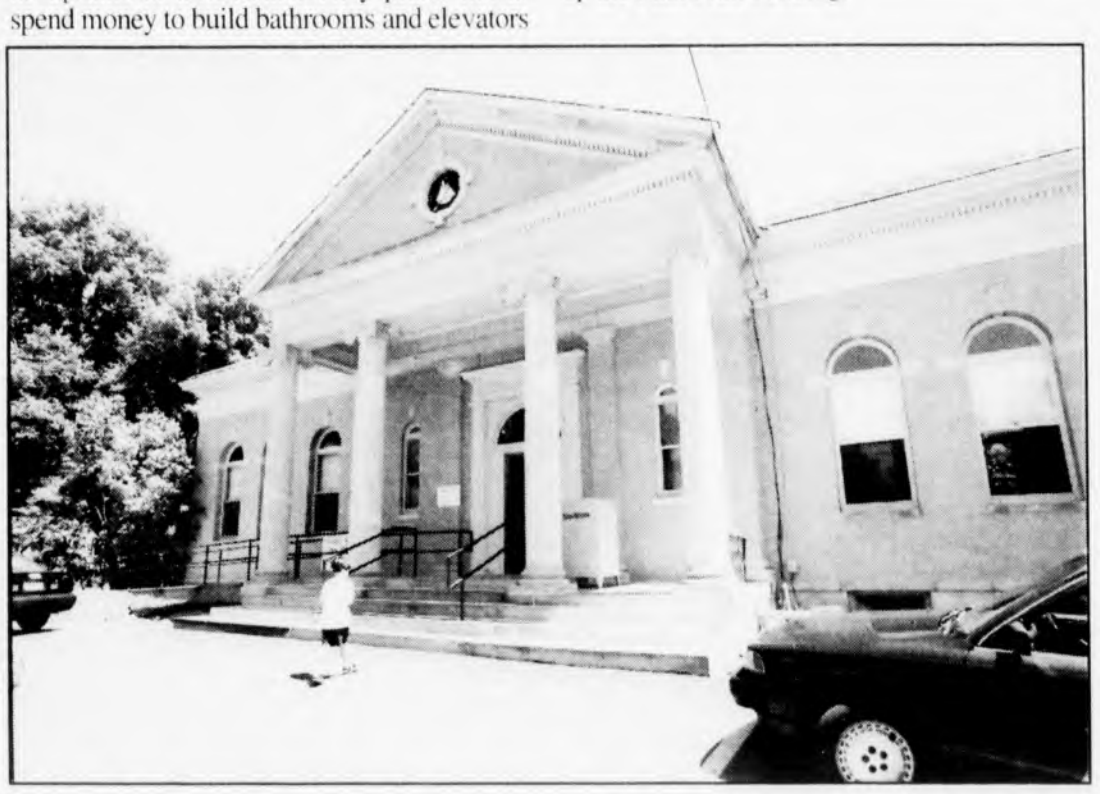
"I love the little reading nook by the fireplace," she said. The fireplace is marble in the colors of an agate, and the tall magnificent windows rain natural light down. The trustees hoped to take advantage of that space, but there was so little room for books, the plan never materialized. It was a story repeated far too often.

"We're torn," she said during a tour of the building Tuesday. "We love our building. If our site were better, we'd figure out how to stay." But the price of renovating the building and expanding the parking just seemed too high for too little gain. For instance, her board wants a library that is contained on a single floor with no upstairs or downstairs. They prefer not to spend money to build bathrooms and elevators through a building of several stories, work that would be necessary to bring the library up to code. Moreover, to find space for parking, the town would have to seize neighbors' land by eminent domain. Doing that seemed unfair, Towle said.



Tuesday, consultants put a number on the price of staying in the yellow brick building. Over 10 years, it will cost at least $2 million to fix up the building, according to estimates this week from KFP Associates, the company hired to study the condition of municipal and school buildings. Their appraisal did not include the price of land taking to make room for parking. Moreover, KFP architect Steven Devine came close to recommending the library should go to new location and take advantage of state aid. The government program could save the town 40 percent of the construction costs to retrofit the Osgood School, he said. But there is no state aid to fix up the Paul Pratt building.

"We love our building. If our site were better, we'd figure out how to stay."

— Patience Towle, library trustees chairman

Debbie Shadd walks beneath one of the McIver Reddy murals documenting Cohasset's history in the rotunda at the library.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library, built in 1903, may be sold if the town opts for a new library site.

Town buildings fix up has hefty price tag

Devine's talk lasted about two hours and earned mostly positive feedback along with a smattering of applause. Town Manager Mark Haddad and the selectmen praised the "comprehensive" scope of the Capital Asset Assessment. In particular, selectman Thomas Callahan deemed the audit "great." The town has never had such an outline to work from before, he said. But Dick Avery, a member of the town finance committee, sounded a doubtful note when he questioned whether the consultants answered the questions they were hired to investigate. Cohasset paid $25,000 for the audit.

"There is some discomfort about discerning priorities," Avery said. "Does this document satisfy a facilities audit? Or is there still a piece of work missing."

After selectwoman Nan Roth pointed out, only one job in the whole report had been identified as priority number one, other people expressed doubts about the consultants' reliability. The only high priority job was to clean drains in the Deer Hill School parking lot. Devine and school board member Kathy Ofsthun defended the way KFP tagged high priority work. Rather than looking at the "priority" code, people should focus on the schedule. The jobs slated for the first three years were high priority, they said.

Earlier Devine defined the priority codes. The priority one jobs, such as replacing failed systems or repairing leaks, were "recommended for the continued operation" of the building. The lower priorities were to extend the "useful life" of the building and bring it up to standards or improve the general appearance. A fourth and lowest priority code dealt with space needs. But later Devine said space needs were outside the scope of the KFP report.

The most urgent repairs appeared to be needed at the middle/high school where $4.1 million could be spent over three years alone, with another $3 million spread out later.

But the lack of high priority codes on other jobs seemed to rankle many observers. Fixing drains seemed less important than dealing with safety hazards, said Frederick Johansen of 20 King St.

"You might want to rethink some of this," he told Devine after the consultant said Cohasset could face lawsuits if the town did not make buildings accessible to the disabled. Johansen said the work to make buildings convenient for the disabled should be a top priority.

But Johansen also drew groans when he charged the whole report was launched because the town has violated the Americans with Disabilities Act and "not because people were concerned with maintenance." He said the ADA compliance was a moral issue. Former school board Chairwoman Maureen Jerz also said the town was "disenfranchising people" with handicaps. She questioned how the consultants could justify delaying any of the work to help the handicapped.

Town Manager Haddad has formed a sub-committee to study the financial impact of a 10-year commitment to sprucing up buildings and making them safe. But the new board's composition drew some criticism, since some officials, such as the library trustees, appeared to be un-represented. Moreover, selectman Merle Brown challenged Haddad's decision to invite a member of the Advisory Committee to the finance powwows. The Advisory Committee is supposed to stay independent of other boards, Brown cautioned.

"You're breaking the rules," he told the town manager. "They're not supposed to be involved." Haddad groaned and agreed to un-invite the Advisory Committee.

About 30 people, mostly board members, turned up to hear out the consultants.

Whiton House lease inked

Restaurant to open in September

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Restaurateur Kristie Henriksen of Cohasset will open another Siro's in Hingham. She recently landed a 20-year lease to the Whiton House, bringing her goal to own three restaurants on the South Shore closer to reality. Henriksen, whose first restaurant at Marina Bay drew high profile "regulars" like US Rep. William Delahunt, expects to launch the second Siro's in September. Like the Quincy eatery, the Hingham restaurant has the potential to become a magnet for the local movers and shakers.

"It's time again for this to become the place," she said recently while she studied rug samples from a contractor.

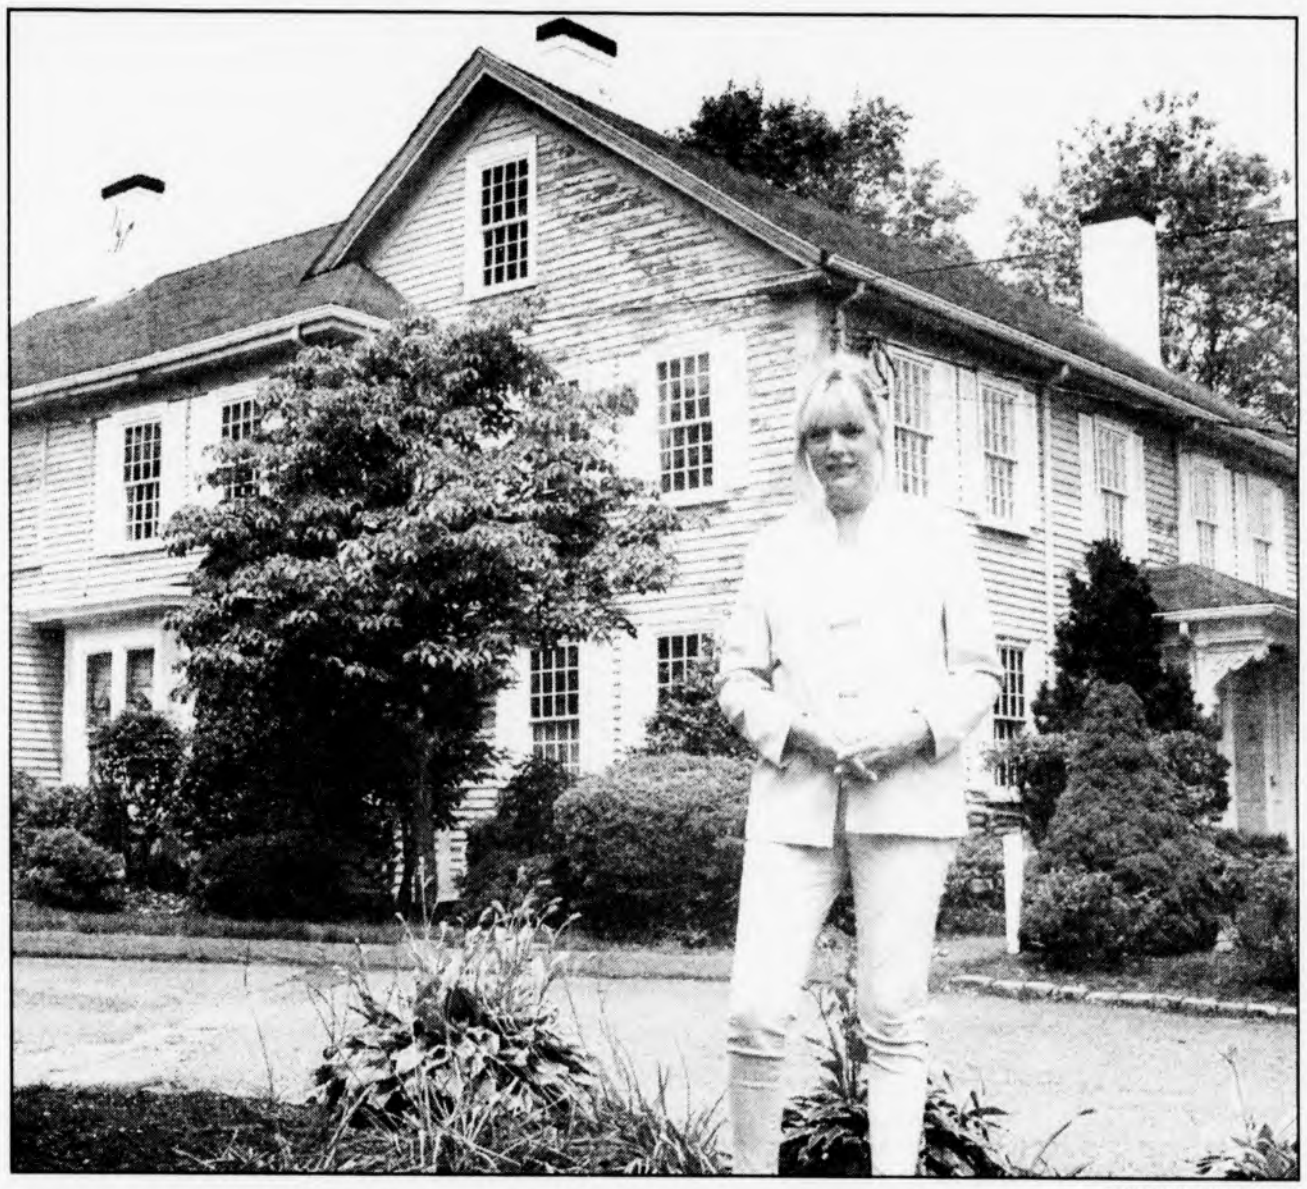
Though the previous establishment, the Whiton House restaurant, closed after business dropped off, Henriksen is confident the new place will stir up excitement in Hingham.

"We have to prove ourselves," she said. "But it's always been a good location. It (Whiton House) just didn't change with the times and got lost."

"We have to prove ourselves. But it's always been a good location. It (Whiton House) just didn't change with the times and got lost."
Kristie Henriksen

Henriksen, who logged 20 years in the business, will follow some examples set by five-star restaurants when she and husband Tom Fallon renovate the inside of the Colonial building. For instance, like the dining rooms at Lutece on New York's East Side, the rooms in the Siro's of Main Street will each be unique. Henriksen plans to hire a separate interior designer for each dining room. Moreover, like the Windows on the World restaurant atop the New York World Trade Center, the private dining rooms will be leased to businesses. Frank Messina, a local developer, has taken one of the six rooms. Billy O'Connell, her landlord at Marina Bay, has signed up for another room, she said.

They will have a private wine bin, their own china and crystal, plus a say in the interior decor. The dues are based on the number of seats in the room, though she did not disclose how much the private leases cost.



Like the arrangement at Windows, which is closed to the public only for lunch, the private rooms at Siro's will be open to the public at various times.

Finally, she is following her own recipe for success at the Marina Bay Siro's. The new restaurant might have a "more involved wine list" because she will have more space in Hingham, but the menu, emphasizing seafood and nouvelle Italian dishes, will be pretty close to the "casual fine dining" in the first Siro's.

The main dining room, which seated 350 when the Whiton House was open, will be downsized to accommodate about 250. Plans call for a "cozy" lounge to take advantage of the smoking ban. The rest of the renovations, costing $350,000 reportedly, include a new interior design.

"We're not moving any walls," she

Cohasset Heights shuts down landfill operation papers," Ulmer said. "The town wants a formal group to take responsibility for this and deal with the various issues. This is a formal subcommittee of the town convened to meet with CHL and negotiate the settlement of all outstanding legal issues. We'll see if it's do-able and we hope to reach a global settlement that is acceptable to everyone."

Barry had little to say about the attempt by the town to reach a "global" settlement.

"I don't know how far it [discussions] will get," he said.

Ulmer said there is no timetable on the completion of the work of the subcommittee. He said town officials would try to resolve the legal matters as quickly as possible to save money. According to Ulmer, all lawsuits and legal actions or appeals would continue while the sub-committee tries to negotiate a settlement with CHL.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the health board is still planning to hold site assignment hearings. The health board voted last month to hold site assignment hearings to address numerous environmental and procedural problems at the landfill. The site assignment is the chief approval that allows CHL to operate a landfill in town. The first hearing is scheduled for Aug. 4.

However, at least one legal action has been placed on hold while the sub-committee performs its work. Building Inspector Robert Egan confirmed that the town's criminal complaint against CHL for ignoring a shut-down order has been postponed.

"We are in discussions with the town to try and resolve outstanding issues. As part of the discussion, the town asked us to cease operations and we agreed."

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke

"We feel enough progress is being made on significant issues," Egan said.

Egan added that the complaint has not been dismissed. The town could pursue criminal charges if a global settlement is not reached.

The sub-committee has quite a bit of work to reach an all-encompassing settlement. There are at least five court cases still unsettled. CHL is pursuing legal action against the conservation commission in two cases. The first case is an appeal in Norfolk Superior Court of the health board's order of conditions demanding zero-discharge from the landfill into the Lily Pond watershed.

In a related matter, the state Department of Environmental Protection ruled on the same issue and said the town could not require zero-discharge. DEP said the town could limit the discharge to only 80 percent. If the courts rule in the town's favor, the zero-discharge ruling would be upheld and would overrule DEP. The second case against the conservation commission is a complaint by CHL that it failed to hold a hearing on problems at the town's landfill within 21 days as required by law. CHL has also taken the board of health to Norfolk Superior Court for denying its request to expand Area V by 27.5 acres.

Two other cases are still pending in land court. In CHL vs. the Town of Cohasset, the landfill owners claim the town's water resource district, established in 1986, is illegal. CHL claims the lines of the district were drawn to limit the expansion of the landfill and the action amounts to an illegal eminent domain land-taking of a portion of the facility.

The most recent case in land court, CHL vs. the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals, is an appeal of the order by Egan, upheld by the ZBA, ordering CHL to shut down earlier this year because of a permit violation. The former owner of the landfill, James Tyeryar, failed to file a town-issued special permit with the Registry of Deeds in 1976 as required by state law. CHL also failed to file the permit when it purchased the landfill, although the permit was filed earlier this year. Because the permit was legally filed after the creation of the water protection district, CHL could not uphold its claim to pre-existing status. Landfills are prohibited from the district unless a facility was legally operating before the water protection law was enacted.

Niagara Falls carillonneur in recital at Cohasset

Gloria Werblow, carillonneur of both Calvary Episcopal Church in Williamsville, N.Y., and the Rainbow Bridge carillon at Niagara Falls, will be the featured artist for the third in the current series of six summer recitals on the 57-bell Taylor carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, Sunday, July 12, at 6 p.m. Ms. Werblow will play a varied program, including pieces originally composed for carillon by Leen't Hart, Geo Clement and Emilien Allard, as well as a group of children's songs, show tunes, familiar hymns, and a special group of songs celebrating the 50th anniversary of the state of Israel.

The recital will be given regardless of weather conditions. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from parked cars. Printed programs, concert schedules and carillon brochures will be available, both on Cohasset Common and at prime listening areas suggested on the back of the program, and in a program stand by the church courtyard on Highland Avenue. Following the recital, listeners are invited to meet the artist, tour the tower and watch a demonstration of the carillon being played.

Further information may be obtained by telephoning Sally Slade Warner, St. Stephen's carillonneur, at (988) 475-2599, Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur at (781) 383-9599, or the church office at (781) 383-1083.

ZBA boathouse approval is appealed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Stephen Bobo of 11 Sheldon Road wants to replace an unattractive building he uses to store and repair boats with a new boathouse more in character with his neighborhood. Bobo received a special permit from the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) allowing him to build the structure if it is approved by the building inspector. But neighbors have opposed the project from the beginning and one of them, Samuel Wakeman of 255 Atlantic Ave., has filed an appeal of the ZBA decision in Norfolk Superior Court to block the construction of the boathouse.

In the appeal, Wakeman argues that the ZBA exceeded its authority by approving the special permit. Wakeman's claims the boathouse violates town bylaws restricting work involving power tools which would create a use inconsistent with the welfare, comfort and convenience of the community. Wakeman could not be reached by telephone for comment.

Bobo was reached by telephone, and he said that the appeal could delay construction of the boathouse for a long-time, possibly even a year. He added that Wakeman's attorney, Richard A. Henderson, has sent a letter to Bobo offering to withdraw the appeal if certain conditions are met. Bobo could not elaborate on the conditions, but said he would study the terms during the next few weeks.

Bobo currently has a plastic greenhouse-like structure on his property that his family uses to store, build and repair boats. Bobo plans to replace the greenhouse with a 24-foot-high boathouse, which would include a 40-foot by 22-foot main area, a 16-by-26-square-foot workshop, and a 16-by-8-square-foot deck. The new boathouse has been designed with Victorian-style architecture that is in character with the neighborhood.

On June 1, the ZBA approved Bobo's request for a special permit to build the new boathouse on his property. Building Inspector Robert Egan originally rejected the request because Bobo's house is on a non-conforming lot; the required lot size for the area is 60,000 square feet, but Bobo's property is only about 40,000 square feet. Boathouses are allowed on conforming lots in residential neighborhoods as a matter of right. But at approximately 40,000 square feet, Bobo's combined lots fall short of the 60,000 square foot minimum.

Stephen Bobo said that the appeal could delay construction of the boathouse for a long-time, possibly even a year.

At a ZBA hearing conducted last April, Bobo's attorney, Charles Humphreys, said that Bobo's property was originally made up of two connected, but legally separate lots. Bobo received a building permit in June, 1997 for a different structure. When Bobo stated his intention to build the boathouse instead, Egan told him it would be better to combine the two lots into one large lot. When Bobo combined the lots and applied for a new permit, Egan rejected the project.

Bobo appealed Egan's decision, but the ZBA upheld Egan's determination in the same ruling that approved the special permit. Bobo must still receive a building permit for the project.

Several abutters opposed the project at the April hearing.

"We're faced with a situation where an individual is trying to build a truly massive structure," Wakeman said at the April hearing. "I truly believe the applicant and his father will build steel boats. I heard the senior Bobo (health board member Stephen Bobo) talk of building steel boats. This is a quiet neighborhood."

Other neighbors argued that the boathouse would detract from the area by increasing the density of the neighborhood beyond acceptable limits.

The ZBA rejected the neighbors arguments that the boathouse would be detrimental to the character of the neighborhood, pointing out that the use of similar structures is widespread in Cohasset. The ZBA also ruled that constructing the boathouse would not increase the lot coverage beyond 30 percent, the threshold for density in residential zones.

ZBA members also rejected arguments that the boathouse was for a commercial operation that would be used to construct steel boats and disrupt the neighborhood with materials deliveries. The ZBA said that it believed Bobo when he said he had no intention, now or in the future, to make boats commercially or to construct steel boats. Deliveries of materials to build boats would be no more disruptive to the neighborhood than deliveries of housing materials, the ZBA ruled.

Any failure to comply with the conditions of the special permit would result in its nullification, according to the decision. Bobo said he was satisfied with the decision, which he called "well-written."

Liquor hearing is July 14

In a reversal of an earlier decision, the selectmen voted to hold a hearing on Tuesday July 14 on the Cohasset Food Mart's alleged sale of alcohol to a minor on June 20. Originally, the selectmen planned to handle the matter by issuing a written warning that it might take away the store's liquor license if violations occurred again. But the board voted Monday to reconsider that decision and hold a hearing instead.

Chilled soups are great company fare

As I begin this week's recipes, the sun is out and the weather is warm! Hip, hip, hooray! In honor of the event, I thought you might like to try a few chilled soups that are easy and elegant enough for company fare! They are made early in the day, before it heats up too much to cook, and all family members seem to enjoy them. Hope you'll try and enjoy these yummy soups!

GARDEN TOMATO SOUP

4 large tomatoes
1 cup canned chicken broth
4 green onions, chopped
1 small cucumber, thinly sliced
1/2 cup diced green pepper
1 can canned tomato juice juice of 1 lemon
2 tsp. granulated sugar
1 tbsp. seasoned salt
1/4 tsp. seasoned pepper

Early in the day: Dip each tomato into boiling water for about 1 minute, then into cold water for 1 minute. With paring knife, slip off skin; cut tomatoes into chunks.

In large saucepan, in chicken broth, simmer green onions, cucumber slices, green pepper and tomatoes, covered, 5 mins. Add tomato juice, lemon juice, sugar, salt and pepper; simmer, covered, 10 minutes. Transfer to large bowl; cover; refrigerate. I use a large glass bowl, it looks so pretty; serve in soup bowls. Makes 6 servings.

APPLE-AND-ONION SOUP

1/4 cup butter or margarine
3 10-ounce cans condensed beef consommé
1 large Bermuda onion, thinly sliced
2 large green apples, pared, cored, thinly sliced
1/2 tsp. curry
1 cup heavy or whipping cream

Early in the day: In large saucepan, melt butter; sauté onion slices till soft, about 5 minutes. Add apple slices; cook 5 minutes longer. Add undiluted consommé and curry; cover; simmer gently 25 minutes.

Slowly pour some of hot mixture into blender, blend at low speed until creamy; then transfer to bowl; repeat until all soup is blended. Pour blended mixture back into saucepan; add cream; heat over low heat about 5 minutes.

Cool; refrigerate. Stir well; serve in chilled mugs. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

A noble profession

This is a message to the potential teachers who flunked the state certification test. Please don't give up. So you committed a sin on your syntax. You didn't have the exact definition of preposition. You dangled a participle or split an infinitive.

Maybe you didn't summarize a passage or parse a sentence to the approval of the magic markers.

You had no idea what the test would entail. You were told the results wouldn't count this year. It was just a trial run.

Then when the results came in, all H-E-TWO-CROOKED-LETTERS broke loose.

You were bashed on the talk shows, called idiots by a politician and illiterate by the experts.

Don't let it get you down.

If you have a fire to share knowledge with children and help them grow, be a teacher.

Brush up on your parsing, your participles, your prepositions and your summary skills. You must know all of these things to teach our children. Then take the test again.

You have chosen the noblest of professions.

A teacher is so much more than what a test can gauge.

A teacher is a counselor, a nurse, a healer of broken hearts.

A teacher is a police officer watching out for our children's safety.

A teacher is a locksmith unlocking a wonderful world of knowledge.

A teacher is a guide in the adventure of learning.

A teacher is a straight man, a comedian, an actor, a storyteller, a puppeteer.

A teacher is a carpenter with a bulletin board, a bookbinder with Scotch tape, a sanitation worker with the waste basket.

A teacher is a banker keeping track of lunch money, ice cream money and milk money.

A teacher is a salesman. The product is knowledge.

A teacher is a hair stylist when a pony tail falls down, a dentist when a tooth falls out, a fix-it man when the pencil sharpener falls apart.

A teacher is a waitress at snacktime, a referee at recess time, a doorkeeper at dismissal time.

A teacher is a press agent, a proofreader, a peace-maker, a playmate.

A teacher is a detective searching for clues, a lawyer settling disputes, a judge making decisions.

A teacher is a coach, a caretaker, a cheerleader.

A teacher is a psychiatrist fostering self esteem, an optometrist helping children see clearly, a neurologist soothing frayed nervous systems.

A teacher is a wizard squeezing small shoes into smaller boots.

A teacher is an X-ray technician reading minds, a publisher at the Xerox machine, a partner with parents in the adventure of education.

A teacher is a miracle worker taking straight and curved lines and making them into letters, taking letters and making them into words, and taking works and making them into ideas.

A teacher is the first one to take the tiny hand of the frightened kindergartner and the last one to shake the proud hand of the high school graduate.

God bless our teachers.

Help with invoices appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

Taxpayers have received their first quarter FY99 Real Estate Tax bills. These bills were produced on the new computer program the fall special town meeting approved. There are a few changes that will have to be made, such as the taxes are due Aug. 3 not due now.

With this new program, the assessors and collector computers can talk to each other. To bring the program on-line in time to mail the bills required a lot of dedicated effort and cooperation between assessors, collector, and Gemini, the provider of the program.

However, even with all this high tech, we still had to call on the following senior citizens to prepare the invoices for mailing: Maria Perroncello, Olga Sawchuk, Mary Andracchio, Phyllis Leighton, Steve Leighton, Sarah Marmo, Connie Tolman, Peter Tolman, Pat Hanlon, Louise Smullen, Tilly Nardo, Louise Ward and Libby Pompeo.

This time the seniors were joined by: Kristen James, Katlin James, Rachel McElroy and Kerry Long.

These young ladies are members of Cohasset Girl Scouts who volunteer at the senior center.

This certainly displays what a wonderful town Cohasset is and how young and old are willing to pitch in and volunteer to be helpful.

Thank you all,

Joe Buckley,
Treasurer/Collector

Thanks for thoughtfulness

TO THE EDITOR,

I would like to thank all my friends for their cards and phone calls that were given to me for my recent accident.

Care of World's End clarified

Mr. Paul W. Losordo
11 Talbot Rd.
Hingham

DEAR MR. LOSORDO,

Thank you for sharing with Hingham and wider South Shore community your observations regarding changes you perceive in the management of fields at World's End.

As Superintendent of World's End for 18 years, with responsibility for all aspects of its management (including field mowing), I was baffled by the claims you made in your letter. While informed, constructive criticism is always welcome, I can find no basis in fact for you alarmist concern that "large areas of open field [are] turning into a thicket filled-wilderness that is neither open fields or forest."

Are we talking about the same place?

At least once a year, my crew and I mow every field — in its entirety — at World's End. What I think you are mistaking as neglect is actually a relatively new field management approach which involves delaying and staggering our field mowing program. As you astutely noted, rural landscapes are rapidly being lost all across the state. Consequently, open field wildlife habitat — dominated by grasses and wildflowers — is also being lost…and so are those birds, insects, and mammals which intimately depend upon it food, shelter, or nesting. By delaying and staggering our mowing program, we can use World's End compensate — in some small way — for this loss of open field, and, equally importantly, still preserve the scenic and historic character of Olmsted's unique landscape. As a member of the Trustees, you are well aware that our mission is three-fold: to protect the scenic, historic, and ecological resources of our now 80 reservations across the state.

As a nonprofit conservation organization, The Trustees of Reservations depend upon the support and good will of the public to carry out our mission. I only wish you had taken a few minutes to call me first before firing off copies of your letter to every newspaper. Hopefully, those who read your Letter to the Editor will also read mine, if not, your mistaken notion of what you perceive to be happening at World's End will prevail, making it even more difficult for my crew and I to take care of the very landscape you care so much about.

Al Yalenezian
Superintendent, World's End
The Trustees of Reservations

Editor's note: Mr. Yalenezian sent a copy of his letter to the Cohasset Mariner for publication. It is in response to Mr. Losordo's letter which was printed last week.

Quonset huts condos' design is scrutinized a more frequent basis.

"This is a personal financial setback," he said. "However, I'm confident that the design board will be sensitive to my continuing financial hardship and schedule a meeting as soon as possible."

Murphy left Monday's meeting after the zoning board said it would take the matter under advisement.

Hence, he was not present during the board's deliberations later that evening when the zoning board refused to modify the variance to allow a cosmetic roof overhang to intrude about three feet into the 13-foot sideline setback on building one. Plans are to house the five condos in three buildings.

Calling it "barracks-like" board members also trashed the look of the new design which incorporates a double-gabled roof effect. The old plan featured large sloping roofs on the buildings.

"It's much uglier," said member Benjamin Lacy.

Members said they preferred the design of the original architect, Jim Shipsky, who made the condominiums look like five different dwellings, they said. Last November, the zoning board reached a settlement with former owner Noel Collins and approved his plans to raze the Quonset huts and build five condominiums at the site.

This week they said their approval was tied to Shipsky's design.

"I am truly disappointed," said member Barbara Power while noting that a new owner is allowed to have his own architect.

Earlier, Murphy — who bought the 54,000 square-foot site recently for $575,000 from Collins — pointed out that his plans do not increase the footprint of any of the buildings. He also rotated the building, which will house units four and five, to provide more than the 16-feet required between that building and the middle building. In an apparent error, the previous plans actually showed only 12 feet between the buildings.

Murphy said he realizes design is a very subjective matter but was surprised the zoning board took such a negative view.

"I realize what is a rose to you could be a dandelion to me," Murphy said. "But I've had nothing but positive feedback from abutters and potential buyers."

Murphy said he had hoped to raze the Quonset huts this week and start framing the structures in August.

"This (zoning board decision) puts everything on hold," said Murphy, adding he was about to call the design review board chairman, Gordon Hislop, to urge him to call a meeting as soon as possible.

The condos will sell in the $420,000 to $490,000 range, Murphy said. There will be two double units and a single unit.

Neighbors, who were all contacted by registered letter, offered no objections to the new design.

said. "But every inch will be renovated. We're bringing in all new furniture and all new fixtures," she said.

By arrangement, A.W. Perry will repair and repaint the exterior to fit Siro's chocolate brown and white color scheme. The building is now gray with white trim and a pastel pink front door. Henriksen said she wanted white and no trim to "fit in with the other houses on Main Street." The door, the new awning and the sign will be brown.

Henriksen also has plans to bring back outdoor dining on the patio eventually, but that will probably not happen the first year. She is also holding off on scheduling wedding parties for the "back yard," a spacious lawn ringed by trees.

The Hingham location was the second in the area she considered. This spring she lost her bid to buy the Chart House in Cohasset. It was sold to Peter Roy. The news about the Hingham deal probably means no Siro's for Cohasset since she is building her third establishment in Braintree. The last Siro's is coming next spring.

Flower boxes look super

To the Editor:

Have you noticed the great looking flower boxes in front of the stores in the Village?

Well, a big thank you goes out to the members and friends of the Village Renaissance Committee: Jackie Dormitzer, Anna Abbruzzese, Anne Whelan, Mary Flaherty, AnneÕs sister and a true look alike, and Sarah Murphy for ensuring the flowers have enough water during the summer.

The various merchants purchased the flowers and these dedicated individuals contributed their valuable time and energy to plant them. Their generosity is so important, yet it can be easily overlooked.

We appreciate their continuous commitment over the years to maintain a sense of pride and energy in our Village environment. As you see them around town, please let them know what a great job they are doing!

Jaime Buick recently completed a stellar career at Cohasset High, taking over as a leader on both the lacrosse and football squads. The attack forward will be taking his lacrosse skills to Ohio-Wesleyan in the fall.

'Snake' Buick was a driving force at CHS

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

When writing a profile article, it's helpful, and customary, to focus on one characteristic of the athlete, and focus on that characteristic throughout the article. When writing and article about Jamie Buick, focusing on one characteristic would not only be a disservice to the reader, but also impossible.

The article first started keyed in on Buick's grace and effortlessness on the playing field. After discussing Buick with his friend and teammate Justin Golden the focus shifted to his modesty and attitude towards sports. Later, thinking about his accomplishments and talent, those became too big to leave un-credited. Finally, I arrived at the conclusion that my only options were to either not write the article at all, or try to bumble through a description which could not possibly do justice to the enigma that is Buick in six hundred words.

Not that Snake (his movement on the field is similar to the gliding, slithering, reptile) was any help.

When asked about his sixty six point lacrosse season, a fantastic total for a player on a sub .500 team. And how he performed this season, Buick replied "Pretty well" but only after much coaxing.

Questioned as to whether or not he wanted to say anything further about his season, Buick responded simply, "Nope." Which brings us to the subject of modesty.

Well-liked by his teammates, Buick is often complimented on his play. His usual reaction is a bashful smile and self-depreciating laugh, followed by a compliment on the admirer's play. Golden marveled at Buick's persona.

"Jamie has more modesty and character than anyone I have ever played with. In my opinion, modesty and character are the two most important qualities an athlete must have," said Golden.

Golden's comment was on target, and these qualities became apparent as Snake was named a captain on both the football team and the lacrosse team. Of course, personality goes a long way, but, when combined with skill and ability, the result can be fun to sit back and watch.

Buick was voted best athlete in a senior class which included a 1,000 point-scoring basketball player and a nationally-ranked, All-American swimmer. As impressive as his sixty-six points this year seem, they pale when compared to last year's mind-blowing 103 points. This year, because the team was not as talented, defenses were able to spend more of their energy containing, or trying to contain the Snake.

Nonetheless, he was voted the Pil-

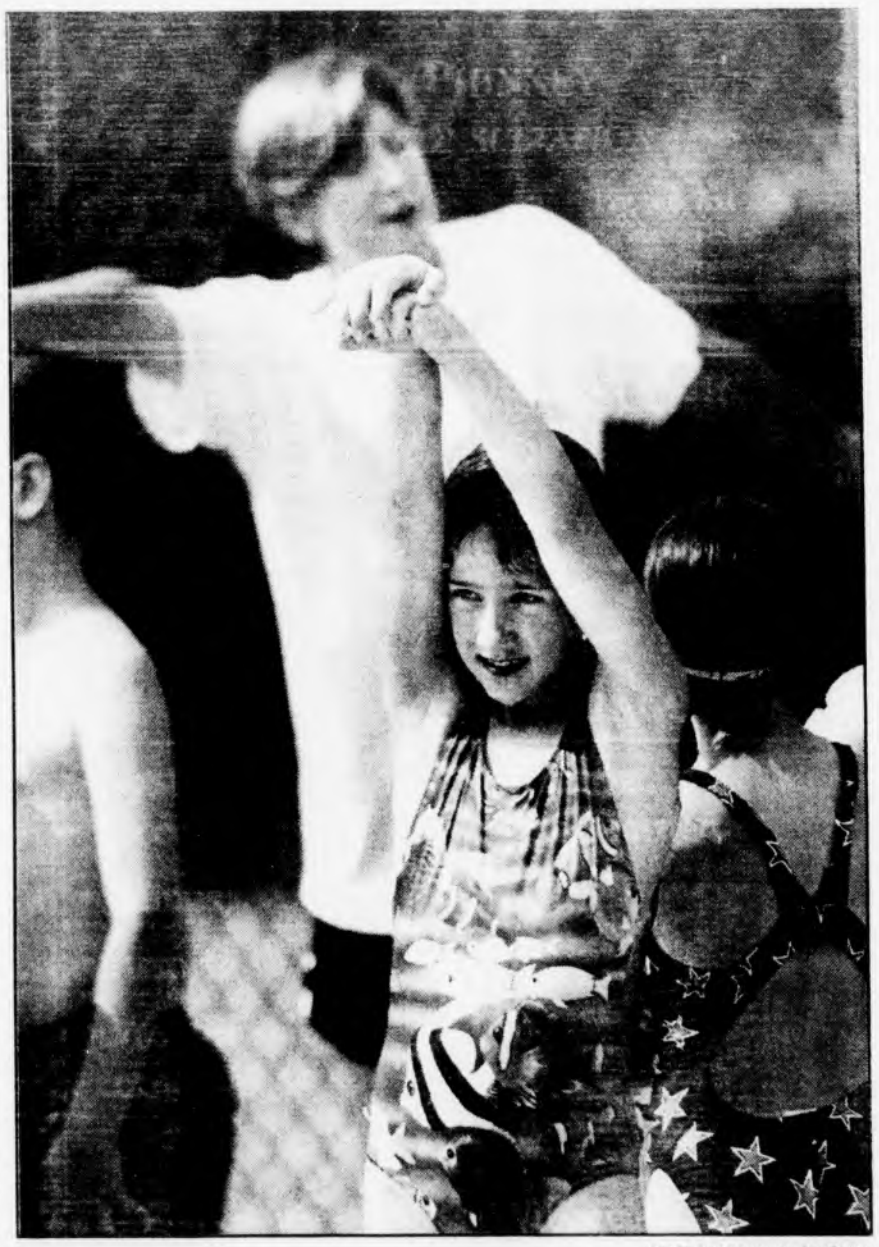
Cohasset swim team opens with a big win

Grab those goggles, the Cohasset swim team opened another season with a win at the Knights of Columbus, Scituate, July 3. The final score was 343 to 278. Spirits were high as veteran swimmers mixed with newcomers. Long-time champ Kate O'Brien stressed the importance of encouraging freshmen swimmers and being a mentor, which is all part of the reason why Cohasset has such a consistently strong team. Welcome to all new swimmers!

The next swim meet will be at home Wednesday, July 8, at 8 a.m., followed by a second home meet this week Friday, July 10, at 1 p.m. against the Scituate YMCA. The Marshfield meet will be a real challenge since this is a year-round, developmental team. Get that adrenaline flowing, Cohasset!

Head coach Allison Hughes, a top swimmer in New England and a standout performer for Boston College, returns this summer. Allison's goals for the season are to have swimmers improve stroke techniques and timings and to give everyone an opportunity to participate in a competitive sport. Most of all, she hopes that everyone has fun. Assisting Allison this year is coach Greg Bilton who started his swimming career at the Cohasset Swim Center and went on to achieve national and New England titles. Keep a look out for a special Mariner article on Greg.



Each week this article will include some swimmers' tips. Younger competitors should avoid diving deep. Stick with a surface dive and break into your stroke quickly. Mid-group swimmers should aim to keep the head straight without too much movement in order to keep the body in line. Older swimmers need to keep their personal goal times in mind and make sure that they do not disqualify on a technical issue.

While some Cohasset swimmers winced as they scraped their toes on the shallow end of the K of C pool during the home stretch or scrunched up to make those flip turns in 3 feet of water, everyone braved the elements to achieve the win. Here are the results from last Friday's meet against the Knights of Columbus:

In the boys 8 and Under Medley Relay, the team of Alexander Hunt, Chase, Wesley Ulmer and Cameron Cunningham came in first, and the team of Chris Kuppens, Cliff Musto, Trip Harper and Jon Drybanski came in fourth.

In the girls 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Alyssa Campbell, Abby Markert, Megan Sacks and Emma Hernan came in first, and the team of Meg Anderson, Rebecca Dickinson, Samantha Lehr and Sally Meehan came in third.

Fishing is easy when you have the blues

The sun warmed our arms as we sliced squid into halves, preparing to bait our 6/0 Octopus hooks. The float rocked gently from the movement of other anglers, eager to find the best position.

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Shannon was using a 12-foot Ugly-Stik surf rod fitted out with a Penn 704Z reel. A large enough rig to tangle with the best of stripers.

My Penn Spinfisher, a 12-foot conventional rigged rod with an Abu-Garcia 7000 reel and a full fresh load of 30-pound Davron line. Shortly a pair of sweet dripping pieces of squid were sailing through the air on a short arc towards Frank Carey's boatyard.

The swift current boiling out over the Gulph River falls picked up the tiny baits and swept them down toward the Carthouse. Halfway to the Margie, bails clicked over and the squids settled into the swirl in a long sinking arc. Little marsh gnats kept us company as a dozen anglers performed an angling ballet of casting, retrieving and rebaiting in a too small area.

Slowly I inch away from the falls, lifting my bait occasionally from hungry crabs, WHAM! The rod tip arced towards the foamy water and then back hard as I set the hook. When I felt the fish shooting about below, I called to Shannon to come over and reel it in.

She lay the 12-foot Ugly onto the deck and nervously took over my rod, seeking control as the hooked fish below zoomed to and fro berserkly.

After a couple minutes of pumping and reeling, the fish swirled on the surface 20 feet out. The leader wrapped firmly around my hand as I hoisted all 22 dripping inches clear of the briny. A pair of needlenose pliers was needed to disgorge the hook and the silvery striper was back in the harbor, ready to capture another easy meal.

We'd moved to the end of the dock to make way for a lobsterboat unloading a day's catch. This time I heard Shannon say, "Whoa," and watched her rod bend into a bow, the tip bobbing hard.

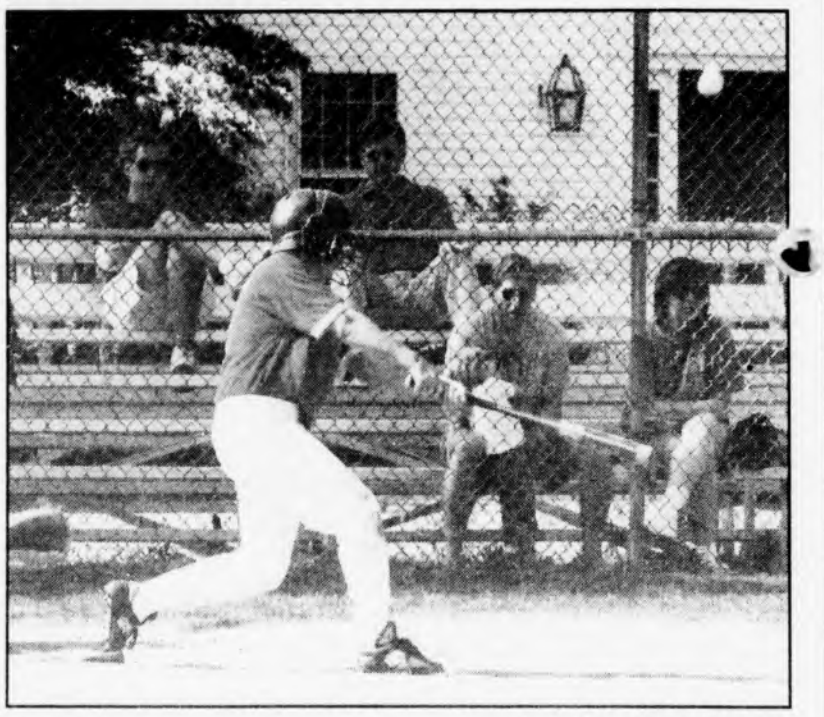
"Set the hook," I whispered, and she gave it a good pull, which was answered by a whirr of drag. She kept the rodtip up and after five minutes another striper was in sight on the surface. The late afternoon sun beamed as did her smile as she lifted her first striper for all to see.

A few hundred yards off Pt. Allerton, Kevin Conway was trolling a 9er rig. A 42-inch striper shot out of the depths and slammed the rig hard. The bass tipped the scale at 22 pounds 10 ounces.

A customer was in picking out some fake shads to dress his trolling rig. "These are great," he said. "Last time out I had three bass whack the rig simultaneously. Talk about pandemonium on board!"

Liza Parker of Cohasset flipped a mackerel chunk into the wash around the Willies. A hungry 18-pound 8-ounce, 38-inch striper gulped her bait. Pete Flaherty cruised in early Independence Day with a 47-inch linesider to weigh. Tube and seaworm, Pete's trademark fishing method did the trick again. The fish dropped the scale to 33 pounds and 8 ounces.

Commercial season started at midnight July 5 and the rush for bait was on. Seaworms were scarce due to short tides and the monsoon rains only compounded the situation. Most distributors were only able to get a tenth of their normal orders.



Pogies, mackerel, squid, herring and clams filled the gap for many. Pete had a good start according to the manager of the Anchorage. All I could come up with were schoolies. Ah, but in a few short years those schoolies will be keepers!

Bluefish are once again setting anglers abuzz in the area. A fairly steady school has been trolled and popped over just off Strawberry Point. These wicked fighters have been taking deep running Rapala Magnums, bright Hoochy Trolls and bait destined for stripers.

Further off several boats have been reporting seeing huge schools of blues on the surface. Super thick was one report. Another reported the blues just sank away as they approached. Some easterly breezes midweek ought to bring them within reasonable range.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

grim Conference's best attack man and named a Pilgrim Conference All-Star for the second consecutive year. Next fall Buick will bring his talents and his inimitable style to Ohio-Wesleyan University, where he will undoubtedly excel on the lacrosse squad.

Watching Buick play football or lacrosse or until this year, basketball, is similar to watching a Gretzky, a Jordan, or a Griffey. The spectator marvels that the amount of visible effort does not seen to match the level of performance. Buick's loping strides and graceful hang time sometimes appear to be coordinated with a full symphony.

Last fall, he undertook the ludicrous task of being a receiving tight end while playing with a broken hand. Never complaining, Snake was the team's most dangerous offensive weapon even inspiring Coach Silvia to name a ply for him, Snakepass. But Buick's best sport is lacrosse, and his talent was never more apparent than during last winter's indoor lacrosse season, at the South Shore Center.

Snake seemed to toy with his opponents. Behind-the-back shots, behind-the-head- shots were the norm. On one particular play, near the end of the half, Buick took a long pass from goalie Keith DeVito. As he leapt, he was sandwiched by two defenders, and hit by the goalie, who had charged out of the net.

Buick landed and, stunned, prepared to shoot. By this time, the goalie had responded and smashed Buick with a helmet-on-helmet check. As the Snake went down, he fired an overhand shot, which found the back of the net. Quite simply, and amazing play. Two year linemate Ted Goff recalled a play this spring in which Buick feigned bringing the ball out from in front of the opponent's net, then slung a no-look, behind the back pass to Goff, who put it home for the goal.

"Snake make a hard game so easy. He was just fun to play with," remarked Goff.

Trying to capture the essence of such a versatile, talented athlete in one article was tough, and this reporter isn't up to the job. But, hopefully, the reader will gain a vague appreciation for a genuine nice guy, loping gazelle-like down a lacrosse field, dodging defenders, and gracefully flicking a no-look crank shot into the net's upper left corner.

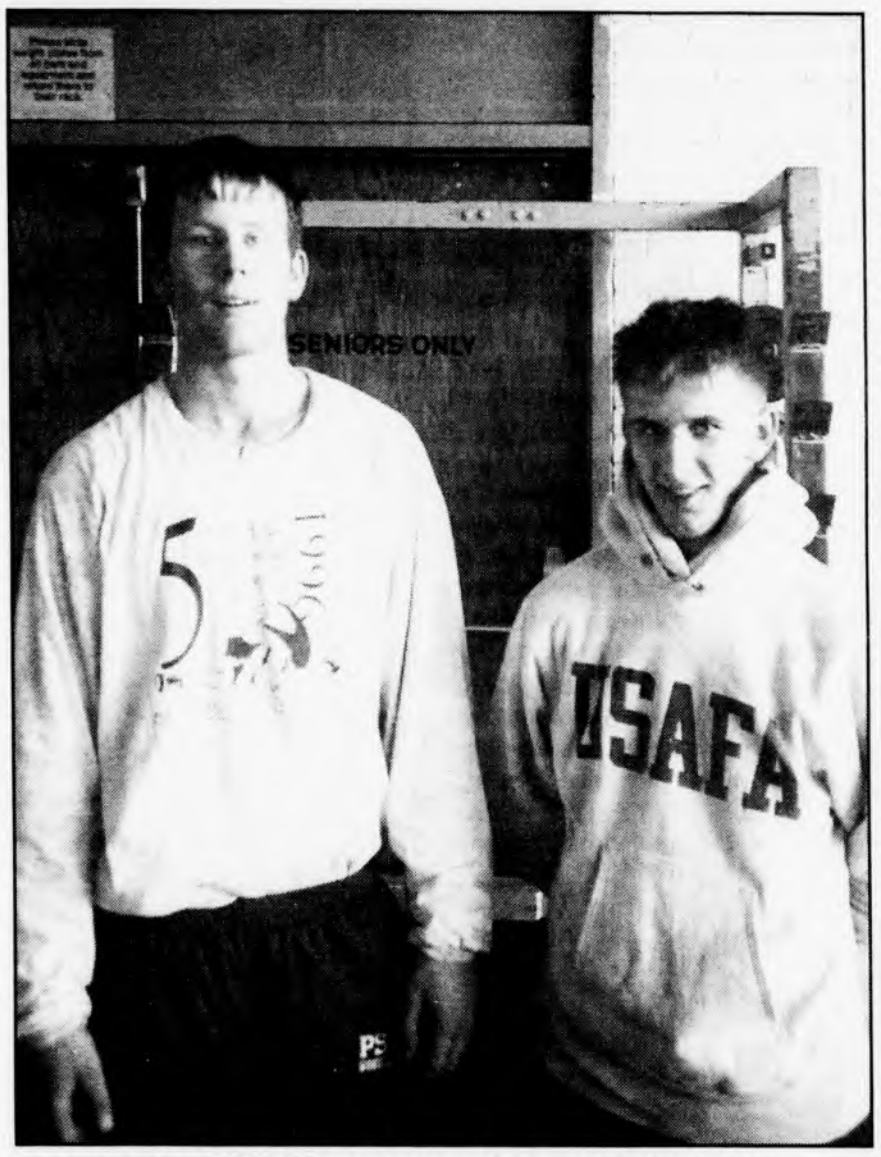
Enough with all this summer fun, go wake grandma and the kids because it's time to get serious. Get the burgers and hot dogs off the grill and strap on your soccer cleats. It's time for the 1998 edition of the Bay State Summer Games.

Cohasset will be well represented at the 17th annual Olympic-style athletic competition designed for the best that the amateur sports scene has to offer as a place to showcase their talents. The 10-day sports festival kicks off on Thursday, July 16 with a special opening ceremony at the FleetCenter beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Special guest speakers scheduled for the evening will include U.S. Gold medal winning hockey player and Harvard student A.J. Mleczko as well as Boston Globe sports columnist Dan Shaughnessy.

Mleczko's appearance coincides with the addition of the 23rd sport to the games this year, girls' scholastic ice hockey.



"The success of the U.S. Women's Hockey team in Nagano has had a huge impact on the number of female athletes interested in ice hockey and is a major reason why it was added to this year's competition," said Kris Hultgren of the Bay State Games.

In particular, it most probable that the eyes of Cohasset will be focused upon the gymnastics division as well as on the wrestling mats.

The young gymnastic trio of Carlie Carter, Caitlin Flint and Kristin Sheerin will all be taking a tumble or two in order to pick up a little Bay State gold.

All 13-year's-old, Carter and Flint will be competing in the junior division while Sheerin will be giving it her all as a scholastic competitor.

The CHS varsity grappling squad will be represented by Craig Sheerin, J.P. Laugelle, Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird, all of whom will be doing battle in the scholastic division.

Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird are just two of a number of athletes from Cohasset that will be competing in the upcoming Bay State Games.

Not to be left out, 15-year-old John Crowley-Buck will also be representing Cohasset in the scholastic diving competition

Established in 1982, the Bay State Games was started to promote and nurture opportunities for personal development through amateur sports.

Over 110,000 athletes have competed in the games since its start.

Rockland High School senior Rich Cormier was honored as one of the winners of the Bell Atlantic Future Scholarship winners last Thursday on Bay State Games Night at Fenway Park.

Cormier, a returning varsity player on the RHS basketball team, was honored for his contributions to his community as well as for his work in the classroom and on the playing field.

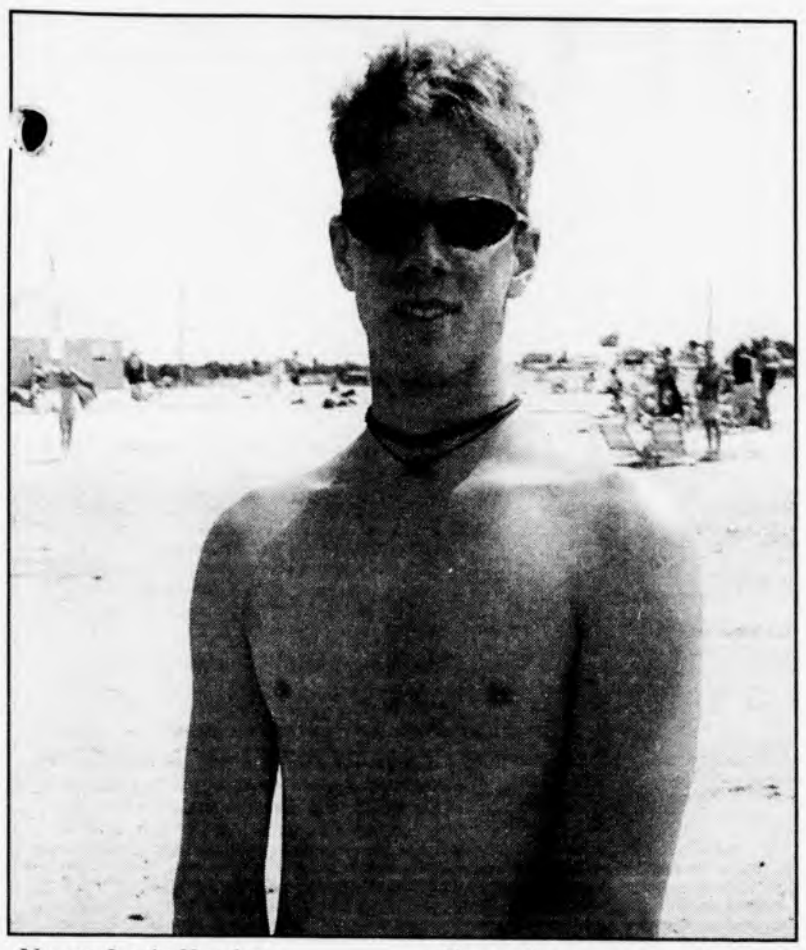
Get your kicks at the South Shore Soccer Camp



Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 to 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's eighth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department; first floor, Town Hall, or call 383-4109. Brochures and registration forms are available at the recreation office.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both boys and girls during the week of Monday through Friday, Aug. 3 to 7, and Aug. 10 to 14.

Should a camper wish to attend both camps, this is now possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camps must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for the camp is $195 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore soccer camp represents topflight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players for the New England area.

Youths arrested on Summer Street

Police arrested four Cohasset youths at about 11 p.m. Saturday, July 4, when they were seen walking on Summer Street in the vicinity of the American Legion with alcohol, police said.

Some were drinking and carrying red plastic cups with beer, Police Officer Richard Yocum said.

Charged with minor transporting alcohol and public drinking were Robert A. Stansell III, 19, of 23 Cedar Lane; Joseph P. Manger, 19, of 46 Elm Court.; and Michael J. Kearney, 19, of 1 Forest Ave. Also charged with minor transporting alcohol was Matthew B. Rossi, 20, of 48 Oak St.

Police suspect the youths may have left an unsupervised party but there were no disturbance calls to that effect.

Police Sergeant Robert Jackson said the youths were on a public sidewalk when the control officer stopped them to inquire about what was going on.

Boat patrols in harbor

Safety Officer Richard Yocum said police conducted more than 40 hours of boat patrols over the holiday weekend.

"Things went well," Yocum said.

Police towed one disabled boat, issued one written warning, and gave several verbal warnings.

They boarded three vessels which were stopped for speeding and checked for any safety violations including making sure they had the right number of lifejackets and seeing that the boats were registered properly.

Police wrote the operator of a jet ski a written warning for speeding and not displaying the proper registration, Yocum said.

"Things went very well. We plan on being out there as much as possible," he said.

Police are assisted by the assistant harbormasters when on harbor patrol. This weekend both the harbormaster's and the pump-out boats were used.

Yocum said the harbor was very crowded with upwards of 50 boats at the spit at Bassings Beach.

A taste for tartar sauce

A skunk with a liking for tartar sauce caused a stir at a Ripley Road home last week, police said.

Police dispatcher David Weeks said a woman called 9-1-1 to report that a skunk was in distress because it had a tartar sauce jar stuck on its head.

"At first I yelled at her for calling 9-1-1 and then she called me back on the business line and explained what was going on," Weeks said.

Officer Shellee Peters was dispatched to the scene. Peters, who was wearing gloves, got into a tug of war with the skunk and once it was freed - Peters and the skunk took off in different directions.

Police cautioned that any citizen who spots an animal in distress or one acting strangely should call the police at 383-1055 or the animal control officer at 383-9119. Due to the rabies epidemic, dealing with wild animals should be left up to public safety officials, police said.

Rhode Island EEE case is cause for concern, officials say

A July 3 communication from the Massachusetts State Laboratory Institute — Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) Surveillance Program stated that, "On July 1, the state of Rhode Island reported a case of EEE in a 44-year-old resident who died June 21. He became ill June 17. This is the first human case of EEE in Rhode Island since 1993 and the earliest documented case in the northeast region."

The report concludes as follows: "The Massachusetts Department of Public Health is recommending that the public, especially in the EEE risk area, take personal precautions to protect themselves from mosquito bites. The State Reclamation and Mosquito Control Board is coordinating increased vector control activities among the State Mosquito Control Districts." To date, no EEE virus has been isolated from mosquitoes found at the 16 regular trapping sites in Plymouth, Bristol, Norfolk, Middlesex and eastern Worcester counties.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee urges all Cohasset residents to acquaint themselves with background information on EEE, particularly as it relates to protecting the very young and the elderly.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee urges all Cohasset residents to acquaint themselves with background information on EEE, particularly as it relates to protecting the very young and the elderly. Informational packets are available at the Town Hall, the Community Center, and the Paul Pratt Library. Notify the Cohasset Board of Health (383-4116) or leave a message in the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee (CMCC) box at the town hall if additional information or packets are required.

Immediate measures such as the following should be taken:

(1) If you have a birdbath, shallow wading pool, pet's water dish, or any similar outdoor water container, change the water every two or three days.

(2) If your gutters are clogged with leaves or debris so that water does not flow freely through the downspouts during a rain storm, clean the gutters.

(3) If you have a stream or ditch running through your property, make sure that the water is free-flowing. Remove debris, stones, brush, leaves or other material which may clog the watercourse. Mosquitoes breed only in stagnant water.

(4) If you have a small pond (100 square feet or less), growth of mosquito larvae can be contr treating the water with a pro taining Bacillus thuringien lensis (Bti) or a similar strain. Such products include Mosquito Dunks, Vectobac, Bionide (Bti), etc. Bacillus thuringiensis is not harmful to humans, pets or other species which may feed upon mosquito larvae. These products are usually available at hardware stores or garden centers.

(5) If you have a larger pond on, or adjacent to, your property, it can be treated with the same larvicide by the Plymouth County Mosquito Control District (PCMCD), Dr. Kenneth Ludlam, Superintendent, (508) 585-5450. The PCMCD will treat such areas with larvicide only if larvae exist in numbers sufficient to justify the application.

Mosquitoes are most prevalent during early morning and early evening, their natural feeding times. If possible, stay indoors during these hours and keep children indoors as well. If they are allowed to play outside at these critical times, make sure they wear long-sleeved shirts and long trousers.

Boston-bound love boat commute

Catamaran to set sail this week

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Commuting by boat — even a slow one — sure beats driving and taking the Red Line.

That was the consensus of those interviewed Monday on the 5:20 p.m. commute from Rowe's Wharf in Boston to Hingham.

"Every time I drive to Boston, it's a horrible experience. It's so awful, I don't know how people do it on a daily basis," said Brian Morris of Hingham.

"There are no stresses. It's very relaxed. I'd take it over any other source of commuting."

— Dan Miele of Scituate

Taking the T isn't much better.

"The commuter boat sure beats the Red Line. That's a bad dream." said Dan Miele who sometimes rides his bike from his home in Scituate to Hewitt's Cove in the Hingham Shipyard where the boat departs.

"This is a very enjoyable way to commute. There are no stresses. It's very relaxed. I'd take it over any other source of commuting," Miele said.

Some of Hingham's estimated 1,600-1,800 boat commuters have mixed feelings about the route's first high-speed catamaran due to start service this week. A few interviewed said they enjoy the slow boat and didn't know how the catamaran would handle in rough weather. Others said they look forward to a brand-new vessel and being able to shave precious minutes of the commute.

A ceremonial christening and first official voyage of the 121-foot catamaran "Millennium" took place yesterday at Rowe's Wharf. The vessel, which is equipped with cocktail

Towns not in accord over Greenbush summit agenda

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

A breakdown in communication may derail a planned discussion of the proposed Greenbush commuter rail restoration project scheduled for next week.

Cohasset officials have invited selectmen from the four other towns along the 17.7-mile rail corridor to a joint meeting Wednesday to discuss issues they have in common — including the noise, pollution and vibration restored commuter rail will bring to their communities.

Although environmental review of the project has not been completed, the MBTA is still moving forward on its $285 million proposal to restore commuter rail service from Boston to Scituate. The T estimates trains could roll on the line by 2002.

While officials from Braintree, Cohasset, Scituate and Weymouth are expected to attend the meeting scheduled for July 22 at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall, Hingham officials have questioned the format of the meeting.

Next Wednesday's agenda called for a discussion of the issues common to the Greenbush corridor towns, including the effects of noise, vibration and air pollution resulting from passing locomotives as well as what future action to take in terms of mitigating these impacts.

Landfill opposition group at a crossroads

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) has existed since 1991 for the sole purpose of halting environmental violations at the privately owned Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill. As long as CHL remained open, SAFE vowed to fight expansions, damage to the environment, even the landfill's right to operate. But now the landfill is closed and SAFE has seen one of its major goals achieved. Although SAFE did not close down CHL, it certainly contributed to CHL's closure by investigating the landfill's activities and reporting numerous violations to local and state officials.

Now that the landfill is closed, what's next for SAFE? One of the group's key members, John K. McNabb Jr., said the closure has placed the group at a crossroads, with some people convinced the battle against CHL is over and others certain that it will continue for a long time.

"We met after CHL closed, and there is a lot of skepticism in the group over the closure," McNabb said. "CHL could re-open tomorrow and what could we do to stop them? On the other hand, the other reaction we're getting from people is 'Congratulations. It's closed.

Blind Drive sign sought

Rita Morton, 303 Forest Ave., wrote to the selectmen's office July 8 to request installation of a "Blind Drive" sign on the right-hand side of the street immediately following 301 Forest Ave.

"Traffic has increased tremendously and, because we can't see what's coming from the left because of a dip in the road, getting out of our driveway has become difficult and dangerous," Morton wrote.

Morton and her husband have been residents of 303 Forest Ave. for 43 years, she said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he gave DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield the go ahead to install the sign.

Ambulance billing update

In fiscal year 1998, which ended June 30, the town collected $115,617.54 out of a possible $143,025.93 in ambulance bills for a collection rate of 68 percent as of July 1. (Receipts can be applied to prior year bills).

The fire department had an usually busy June with 50 ambulance transports, an all-time record.

One-way traffic plan nixed

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield has requested that Atlantic Avenue to Beach Street be made one-way during the drainage construction for traffic traveling northwest.

"There is no money for police details during this project," Litchfield said in a memo to the selectmen's office. "We will be excavating and blasting daily causing some inconvenience to some residents."

But Town Manager Mark Haddad said he looked over the situation with police, and decided for public safety reasons it was not prudent to make the street one-way. The town will pay for the details, Haddad said, and will recoup the money at the fall town meeting. He estimated the details will cost $5,000 for the two weeks.

Underground utilities in Village

Town Manager Mark Haddad wrote to Eastern Utilities July 9 to inquire about the procedure to following regarding installing underground utilities in Cohasset Village.

"The town of Cohasset is currently in the process of applying for several state grants and establishing other funding to enhance the village," Haddad wrote. "One of the goals of the town and its village revitalization committee is to provide underground utilities in the village area."

Haddad asked Lynne Larson, consumer services representative with Eastern Utilities, for any pertinent information that the town needs to have in order to accomplish this goal.

Village street realignment

The Town of Cohasset is temporarily changing the roadway configuration at the intersection of Elm Street and South Main Street in Cohasset Village from Monday, July 13 through Saturday, July 19.

The purpose of this re-alignment is to monitor the impacts this proposed design change may have on vehicle and pedestrian traffic flow and to solicit public comments. This road re-alignment is proposed as part of the project to establish a new walkway along South Main Street from Robert E. Jason Road to the intersection of Elm Street. This project is a result of a $165,900 Transportation Enhancement Grant awarded to the town by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

Public input and comments are sought regarding this intersection design change, as well as on the entire project. Please send your comments to The Village Task Force Committee, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, Mass. 02025. The Village Task Force Committee will be conducting a public forum to review the project on Thursday, July 30 at 7:30 p.m. in the town hall auditorium.

Lightkeepers' house reflects community spirit

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

In a perfect world, the address of the Lightkeepers House would be 1-4-3 Government Island. The Lightkeepers Residence was home for some of the families of the men who guarded the flame at the lighthouse and the men themselves when they were not on duty. The 1-4-3 stands for the unique code the government picked for the signal at Minot Light— one flash, then four and then three, so navigators at sea could identify their location. Though 1-4-3 is otherwise meaningless, navigators for generation have read a meaning into the pattern, as if the lighthouse were saying, "I love you."

This is the same message many people in Cohasset now read by land, instead of by sea, in the story of the Lightkeepers Residence.

"The Lighthouse sends the message 'I love you,'" according to Polly Logan, and the Lightkeepers House is another way the message is understood.

"It is a wonderful example of what people that live together can accomplish. It gives you hope for the next millennium."

Logan, who took charge of raising money for the $250,000 restoration, said of all the causes she has taken on, the most worthwhile was this rescue of a bit of Cohasset history. Once shambling, neglected and headed for demolition, the building was saved and restored for the community by a band of determined citizens led by Herb Towle and Joseph McElroy. They founded the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation in 1992 to restore and operate the house. Since 1994, the Bancroft Room on the first floor has been used for free by non-profit organizations and been rented for very modest fees to Cohasset residents. All the work and the funds to save the house came from private citizens who did it without a dime from the town. As they got together, the house became a symbol of the kind of community spirit that made America great, Logan said. Almost 1,000 people, a true cross-section of the town, either had a hand in the job or gave money to help save the white house with the three gables. She compared it to the early settlers who used to raise a barn for newlyweds or plow a field for a farmer who was sick. That kind of sharing knitted the community together then and now, even in a town where people who have lived here 40 years are still considered "newcomers."

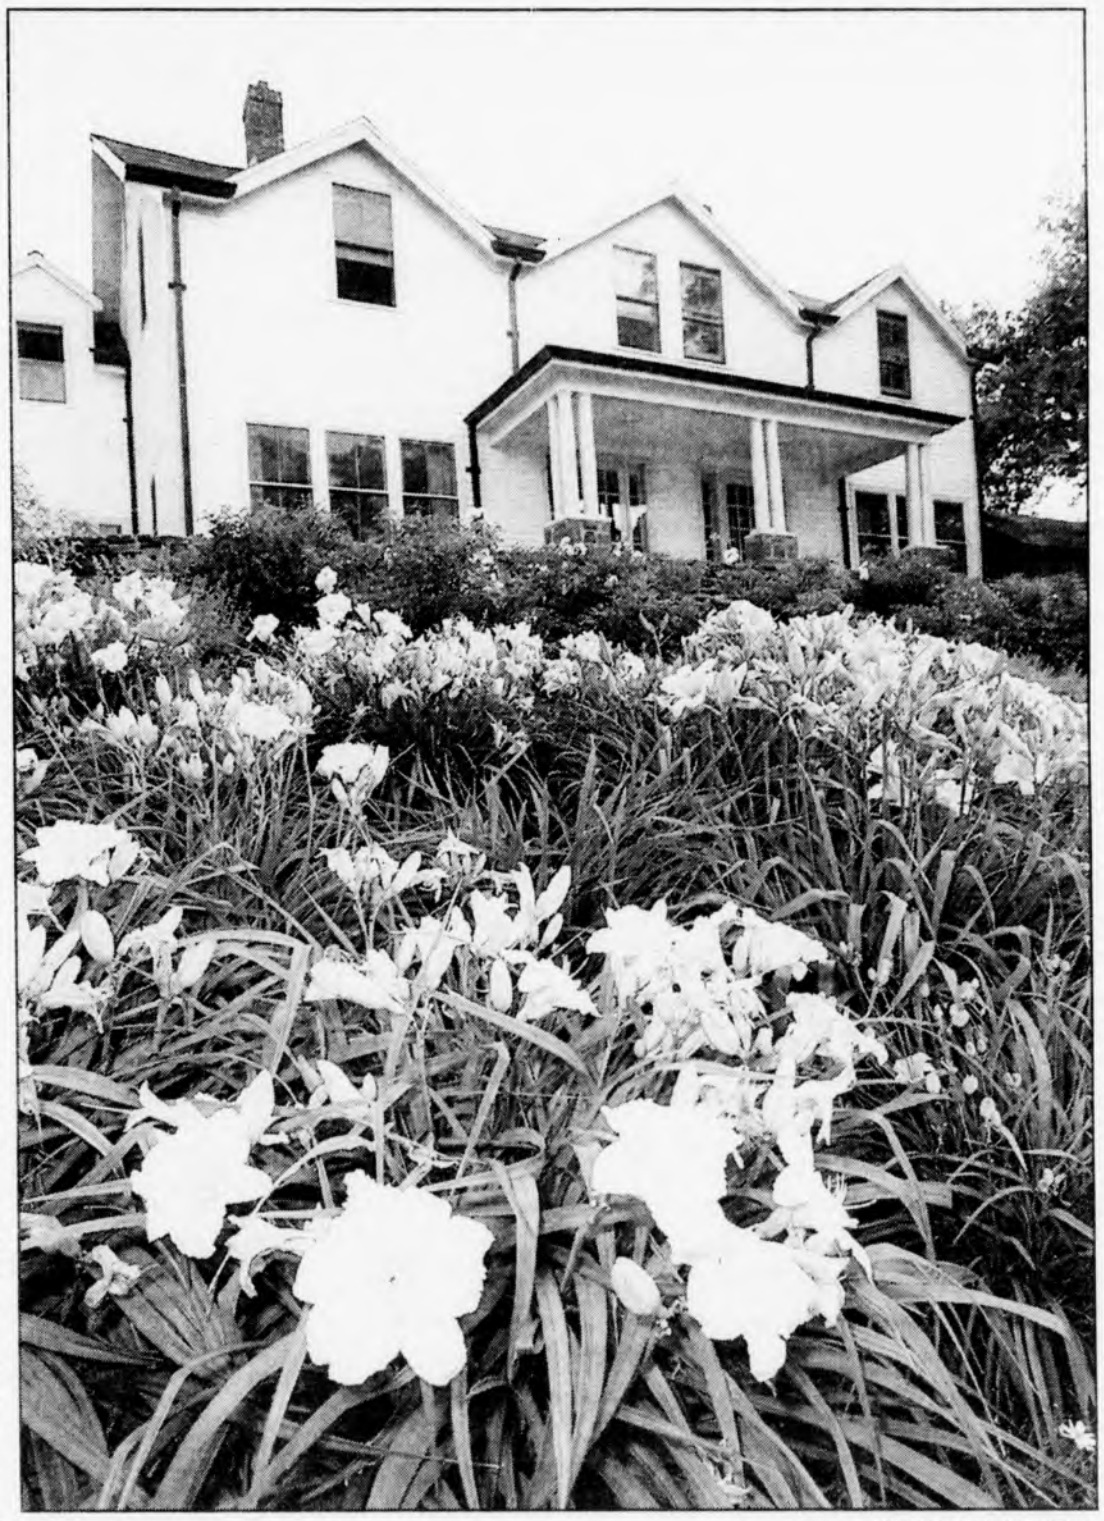
The same theme was sounded by several others. Kit Bryant, who took charge of decorations and is now the organization's vice-president, said though she came to Cohasset in the 1960's, she still felt like an outsider until the Lightkeepers House got her involved.

"It's been the most wonderful thing to be a member of," she said. "I really loved doing it, and it's been a highlight for the town. If your daughter gets engaged, the first thing you do is run down and get a date reserved."

Joseph McElroy, the man whose determination was indispensable to the job's success, also said the project made him feel Cohasset was his home town.

"As a relatively new arrival to Cohasset, it was a wonderful opportunity to get to know so many people." He was a member of the Capital Budget Committee when the town started to consider demolishing the house.

"It was a shame," he said, but then he discovered there was a "tremendous amount of sentiment" in Cohasset to save the house. With the financial acumen to figure out how to make the house eventually pay for itself, he joined forces with Herb Towle.



"We're all very proud of the project and how it came out," McElroy said. "We get a tremendous amount of satisfaction knowing it's used by a wide variety of organizations and is on a sound financial footing."

Herb Towle, who sparked the passion to save the house, said it might have been his idea originally but an awful lot of people helped out. When Towle found out the town was seriously thinking about tearing the house down, he started thinking about a way to get the old place back in shape.

"The town's thinking was it was just not worth money to waste it on. But now it's a nice place. It just seemed senseless to tear it down," he said. "It was just such a beautiful spot—the view, the location, the building." He and a half dozen other men started the hard work of gutting the house which used to be a duplex.. The interior wall was removed to make it all one house.

"Six or eight of us got in there and tore out that stuff that had to be got rid of, the plaster and partitions. It was just plain donkey work and breathing in an awful lot of plaster and dust. But I wanted to see the thing get done."

Towle said people pitched in to help. One day while he was pulling out the old house's stuffing of plaster, Patrick Plante came around.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

The restoration of the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island was a labor of love by many in Cohasset.

"He showed up and stuck his head in the door and said, 'Do you need some help?' I said, 'Come in. Join us.'" It was Plante who "did the pretty work in the floor of the Bancroft Room." The compass rose, inlaid in the floor, is oriented true north, besides being the aesthetic highlight of the building.

"It is a wonderful example of what people that live together can accomplish. It gives you hope for the next millennium."
— Polly Logan

The whole project did not seem like an impossible mission to Towle who had the confidence to take on the job partly because he had succeeded with the Cohasset Sailing Club founded 40 years ago. Over 8,000 students over the years have joined the club and learned how to handle a boat there. He also had a couple of personal connections to the house. For one, the sailing club he founded was housed in the little red building where the oil used to be stored for Minot Light. For another, he grew up in a house but 1,000 yards away from the Lightkeepers Residence and knew the families.

"There were five very pretty girls that lived in that house," he said. "So I knew the people who were there." One of the girls hoped to move back to Cohasset and rent an apartment in her childhood home, but the price was more than she could afford, he said.

Some of the keepers' grown children attended the 1994 opening and told a story their father used to beam the light at the residence to say good-night while he was on duty. According to Towle, he might have flashed some kind of light from the rocks but it was not the lighthouse signal.

"He couldn't have," he explained. "The light is a great big series of lenses that float on a bed of mercury and rotate. An oil flame in front of a reflector was the source of the light

The Minot Lightkeepers Residence was one of two houses on Government Island where the families of the lighthouse keepers lived. In all there were four men who maintained Minot Light, but only two were on duty at one time. The other two were on shore and stayed with their families in the residences. After World War II when lighthouse signals were automated, the federal government sold Government Island and the houses to the town which neglected the maintenance. One of the houses was demolished. The town was about to raze the Lightkeepers House when a band of citizens led by Towle and McElroy came up with a proposal to save it as a community room.

The building is important to the community because "it provides a function room in a beautiful setting at no charge to non-profit organizations," said Murray Campbell, the president of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Association. The view is his favorite part of the house, and it is the reason why the Bancroft Room is unadorned.

"It's just a bare room," he said. "We deliberately kept it rather plain because we figured the real embellishment was the view."

Campbell was drawn into the group because of McElroy and Towle.

"I knew Joe McElroy from another adventure trying to get money for the town," he said. When Towle and McElroy came up with the idea, Campbell was in.

About 300 functions are held at the Lightkeepers House every year, and the board receives a rental fee from a little less than half of them. The money from private rentals plus the income from two apartments upstairs goes to pay the operating costs, roughly $50,000 a year, he said. The apartments rent for $875 a month, and the fees for the function room varies. Non-profits get in for free, although some make a donation and all are now being asked to submit a security deposit to cover cleanup costs. Cohasset residents pay $200 for the room on holidays and Thursdays through Sundays. The charge is only $100 on the other weekdays. Non-residents pay $500 for the holidays and $300 on Monday through Wednesday.

The board has lowered the rates three times since they started renting the hall in 1994. Campbell said the objective was to cover expenses, not to make a lot of money.

"We charged more than we should have at the beginning," he said. "But we didn't have the experience with balancing income and expenses.

Campbell said the popularity of the house was growing. Almost all the weekends are booked through the summer of 1999 for weddings.

Landfill opposition group at a crossroads

It's over'. Some people feel that the battle is over. Some members have felt the battle has been over since we started winning court cases opposing the Area V expansion and the water district."

McNabb said his own feeling is that the battle with CHL is far from over, and SAFE would continue to try and rescind CHL's site assignment and then get a proper post-closure deal.

The health board voted on Tuesday night to reschedule site assignment hearings from Aug. 4 to Sept. 1, 2, and 3 because of a scheduling conflict with CHL attorneys.

CHL owner Paul Barry could not be reached for comment. But CHL attorney Anton Moehrke has said that the closure is an effort by CHL to work together with the town to resolve outstanding legal and environmental issues related to the landfill.

McNabb said the battle will be over for SAFE when three conditions are met: rescinding CHL's site assignment to make sure it never opens again, resolving all threats to wetlands and the Lily Pond watershed, and relieving the threats posed by an underground pocket of methane caused by emissions at the landfill.

"We want to keep it closed because we're not satisfied that it's closed now," McNabb said. "If the site assignment is rescinded, then we will have shut it down for good. If we could rescind the site assignment, get the required protections for the wetlands and the Lily Pond watershed, and take care of the methane gas, then it's over."

According to McNabb, the feeling that CHL may not really be closed extends beyond some of the members of SAFE to the general population.

"In the group and from citizens, the universal reaction has been, 'How can we really believe it's closed'," McNabb said. "Even though they are under orders to close, in their minds they closed voluntarily.

"The state is running out of landfill space. Under current conditions, DEP could tell CHL they've got 10 more feet to fill and they would be back in business."

— John McNabb, of SAFE

"People need to know it's not closed until the site assignment is rescinded. The state is running out of landfill space. Under current conditions, DEP could tell CHL they've got 10 more feet to fill and they would be back in business."

Despite the uncertainty over the closure, McNabb said the closure is a great event for the town and for SAFE.

The roots of SAFE extend back to the late 1980s and a precursor group called Concerned Citizens for Cohasset. Concerned Citizens formed out of concern for some of the activities of CHL and its proposal to expand Area V of the landfill. Members of Concerned Citizens believed that CHL's record of violations proved that it didn't care about any alleged adverse effects from the landfill. The only viable option seemed to be preventing CHL from expanding, and monitoring its actions to find future violations.

It soon became obvious to members of Concerned Citizens that a group was needed to monitor CHL. Group members also believed that needed a more organized front to prevent CHL from expanding. In 1991, SAFE was formed with 10 or 12 members. The group has grown from a core membership of 10 to 12 people to a list of 700 to 800 people who have donated money to the group, sent letters to DEP or publicly opposed CHL in some way.

SAFE has uncovered numerous violations at the landfill, from illegal dumping in areas of the landfill not authorized for landfilling to CHL's failure to file a special permit, a discovery which eventually led to the building inspector ordering CHL to shut down permanently.

Now the town has formed its CHL subcommittee to settle five outstanding lawsuits and achieve a "global" agreement that solves all outstanding legal and environmental matters in one package.

The town tapped McNabb to serve on the selectmen's CHL subcommittee, and he is not allowed to publicly discuss anything that comes out of those meetings. The sub-committee's groups are all being held in executive session, off-limits to the public and the press. But as the vice-president of SAFE and CHL's most vocal opponent, McNabb is adamant that the town should not go easy on CHL just because of the negotiations in the sub-committee. He said that his role on the subcommittee will not conflict with his commitment as vice-president of SAFE to force CHL to correct any violations and environmental damage.

"There is no overall compromise for me within the committee," McNabb said. "If the members agreed to something I found unacceptable, I would raise hell within the committee. But I will work first as a town official within the committee. SAFE is dealing with this as a public process and that is how it should be done."

And as the chief critic of CHL for SAFE, McNabb is continuing his efforts to convince people to take the final step of closing CHL for good by testifying at the site assignment hearings.

"No matter what happens in the sub-committee's negotiations, SAFE plans to pull people in to testify," McNabb said.

Dormitzer to pen town history

Jacqueline Dormitzer with some of her resource material including 1950s Scituate Herald and Cohasset Town Reports.

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Jacqueline Dormitzer is the third person to try and write the history of Cohasset. Actually, she is writing the third of a three-volume history of Cohasset chronicling events from 1950 to the present. The first two volumes were written by E. Victor Bigelow and Burt Pratt.

The third volume may also come in a format undreamed of when the previous two volumes were written: a CD-ROM version. Dormitzer said the committee is seriously considering creating a computer version of the latest volume of the town's history. But before a computer version can be created, the book has to be written.

Earlier this year, the committee on town history chose Dormitzer to write the volume, and it is a job that she has taken to with great relish.

"I find the whole thing very fascinating," Dormitzer said. "This is a very interesting period to research."

Everyone might not agree with Dormitzer's definition of interesting. She has started researching the book in earnest by reading town reports for the last 48 years and poring over back issues of The Cohasset Mariner which date back to 1978.

"I thought town reports would be boring, but its turned our to be very interesting," she said. "The superintendent of schools reports turned out to be quite detailed and informative. My next step is to read other books describing the era of the fifties so I can try to put Cohasset in the context of what was going on in the world at that time."

Although Dormitzer was not asked to reveal her age, she admitted that she is old enough to have first-hand memories of many of the national and international events that highlighted the 1950s and later decades. Dormitzer did not move to Cohasset until 1967, so she plans to interview residents for information about their memories of life in Cohasset over the last 48 years.

"I have a very good perspective on history, and have always been interested in the history of Cohasset and important events," Dormitzer said. "I have my own collection of newspaper clippings that I've saved over the years which will help me with my research."

Even though she finds the job of writing history fascinating, Dormitzer admits that its a lot of hard work. She said writing a history book involves collecting a mountain of information, then sifting through that mountain with the help of her committee to choose the most important items.

Writing a volume that encompasses the present may seem like an easier task than writing about events that happened centuries in the past, but Dormitzer was quick to dispel that notion.

"The 1990s are still happening and we don't have a lot of perspective on this period," Dormitzer said. "I don't always know if things that are important to us now will be important in the future. But over the past, there have been so many continuities that I can pick up the threads of the past and bring them into the present."

Dormitzer has chosen to write the book in a chronological fashion, rather than earlier plans to write the book by topics. She said there may

Selectmen warn store after liquor license violation

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Stern words from selectwoman Diane Sullivan Tuesday served to put the owners of the Cohasset Food Mart on notice. They will be caught if they sell alcohol to teenagers again.

Though the selectmen did not suspend the store's license because of this incident, Sullivan indicated she would vote to take away the license if another illegal sale happened.

"Understand now and forever, your store will be observed very closely," she said. "Four young people were handcuffed and probably taken to the police station and fingerprinted. They will have this arrest on their record because the clerk did something wrong. These youths came from out of town and went directly to the Food Mart. Could it be they did so because they had good luck there before? What was the potential for harm to these young men and anyone else they might have struck (if they had an accident due to driving under the influence of alcohol)."

Sullivan said she wanted people to understand both the clerk and "the children who tried to do this" were at fault. Her remarks came at a public hearing on an alleged sale of beer to a person under age. She had convinced the board to call the formal hearing. Initially, after learning a store clerk reportedly sold beer to a minor June 20, the selectmen directed Town Manager Mark Haddad to send the store a letter warning the board could suspend their license to sell liquor. The criminal sale is grounds for the loss of a license as well.

"Understand now and forever, your store will be observed very closely."
— Selectman Diane Sullivan

Selectmen Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris said this was the first time this board held a public hearing on a liquor violation. The board voted unanimously to formalize the warning and require the store employees to take a class on recognizing underage people. Patrolman Gregory Lennon, who made the arrests at the Food Mart, said the boy who bought the beer was obviously underage.

"I looked twice because he looked so young to me," the officer said. He saw the sale from the parking lot and arrested a carload of four underaged youths. One adult, age 21, in the car was not arrested.

The store owners agreed the police officer's description of the sale was accurate.

"The young man was not asked for an ID," said co-owner and manager Josephine Boles. "He had been in several times before and shown an ID. But that's no excuse. It happened. It shouldn't have happened."

Another co-owner Alice Myers said the fake identification cards are very realistic. But the selectmen dismissed her statement because the clerk did not ask for any identification.

"We card everybody," said Boles who allowed some fakes are easy to spot. "We have passed every tobacco sting." Boles said the boy should not have been in the store because the door was roped off and the store was closing.

Really Great Pizza in Village

Breakfast pizza that tastes like quiche and apple pie pizzas that taste like dessert could sweep the nation if Cohasset residents think they're "really great." This is the hope of Jennifer and Charles Peterson who plan to open RPG Really Great Pizza in the Samuel Bates House in the space formerly occupied by Zinnia's Cafe. The pair received a license from the selectmen Tuesday, contingent on a gas inspection. They said they hoped to be open within two weeks.

The new managers also wrung an agreement from the board to allow customers to bring their own bottle of alcohol during dinner hours of 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. seven nights a week. Selectwoman Diane Sullivan voted against granting the license. She appeared to feel it was unfair to allow the BYOB policy seven nights a week at the new restaurant when an older establishment nearby had only two nights when BYOB was approved.

Grant benefits conservatory

The South Shore Conservatory announces that it has received a generous grant from the Community Trust of the South Shore Playhouse Associates to help underwrite the workstations of its new audio recording and music technology program at the Duxbury campus at the Ellison Center for the Arts. Phase I of the program will begin this fall and will include courses in studio production and music production.. Program director Paul Caruso is busy coordinating the installation of the new equipment and is proud that the conservatory will be the first community music school in the country to offer this cutting edge program. Interested participants may call (781) 934-2731, Ext. 10 for information on courses and registration

The South Shore Playhouse Associates is the parent organization of the Music Circus in Cohasset and the Melody Tent in Hyannis. Each time you enjoy one of their popular concerts, you will help to support the arts in the communities.

MOUNT HERMON GRAD

Abigail Kornet, the daughter of Diana D. and John L. Kornet Jr. of Cohasset is a 1998 graduate of Northfield Mount Hermon School, a Massachusetts independent college-preparatory school. A student leader, she has been a director and a performer in the 1996, 1997 and 1998 Theatre Program One-Act Festivals and appeared in the 1997 production of the "Actors' Nightmare" and 1996's "The Cinderella Waltz." A member of the girls' crew, she was selected to compete in the 1997 Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston. She also has been a member of the concert choir and the Select Women's Ensemble. She has studied Advanced Placement psychology and music theory, has been a featured artist in the 1998 Student Art Show, and has been a contributor to Mandala, the art-and-literary magazine.

Abigail Kornet, daughter of John and Diana Kornet, recently graduated from Northfield Mount Hermon School.

DEAN'S LIST AT EMERSON

Holly Brennock, a broadcasting major who resides in Cohasset, has been named to the dean's list at Emerson College for the spring 1998 semester. Students receiving dean's list recognition must earn a minimum 3.45 grade point average for the semester, based on a four-point grade system, and Holly made the grade! We congratulate you for your efforts, Holly!

NEW ARRIVAL

Kerri and Tom Tower are parents of a daughter, Allison Nicole, born May 20 at South Shore Hospital. She weighed 7 lbs. 10 ozs. and was 20-1/2 inches long. Her big brother Jake is 4 and just loves her! Proud grandparents are Kathy Rhodes of Cohasset, Jack Rhodes of Hull and Frank Tower of Marshfield. Tom and Peggy Hernan of Cohasset are her great-grandparents and Laura Waldron of Florida is her great-great-grandmother! Happy days to all of you, have lots of "summer fun" with Allison!

HONORS AT DERBY

Congratulations to Kate Lewis, a seventh-grader at Derby Academy who won an Honor Book Award in recognition of having earned an A- or above in each academic subject for the entire school year! Also, Charles Anderson, Kristen Deane, Kara Gaughen, Emily Larson and Kate Schroeder were awarded certificates; and, Carter Noon was presented with the James Hall/Hingham Historical Society History Prize. Great job, everyone!

HOLDERNESS STANDOUT

Alexander Gaston, a junior at the Holderness School in Plymouth, N.H., was inducted into the Cum Laude Society at that school's recent commencements exercises. Gaston was one of only three in his class to achieve the difficult feat of induction in the junior year. This spring, Gaston also was named to the fourth quarter honor roll, served as a crew leader in Holderness' on-campus student jobs program, was elected the house leader of his dormitory for next year, sang in the school chorus and played on the boys' varsity tennis team. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Gaston III of Cohasset, who must be extremely proud of him and his many abilities! We certainly are!

HONORS AT HOLDERNESS

Neely Wakeman also made quite a name for herself at the Holderness School — she was named to that school's fourth quarter honor roll, posting an academic average of better than 85. This spring, Neely also served as a crew chief in the school's campus-wide student jobs program, was elected the house leader of her dormitory for next year and earned Lakes Region prep school all-star honors for her play on the girls' varsity lacrosse team. Neely is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Wakeman of Cohasset and quite a gal!

AROUND TOWN

We hope that your day is the best birthday celebration yet, and here's to many more!

FOUR GOLD MEDALS

It's standing ovation time, and all of our kudos go to Ann Leonard! Anne competed in the Senior Olympics recently held in Quincy recently, and she earned four Gold Medals for her efforts! They were in the Javelin Shot-put, Standard Long Jump and Running Long Jump. Is she not the most incredible woman you know? She certainly has put Cohasset on the map, and all who know her adore her! Congratulations!

BC HIGH HONOR ROLL

Boston College High School sent us a list of Cohasset residents who made the fourth term honor roll, and here they are: John R. Crowley-Buck and Evan M. McCaffrey, both made Honors; Robert C. Morgan and Benjamin T. Smoot earned themselves High Honors. Great job, everyone!

BOSTON TRIP

The last item for this week is a reminder that July 22, seniors are invited to Ride the Boat to Boston on the Harbor Express and enjoy luncheon at the Marriott Hotel, all for $11.95. What fun that will be! And, don't forget that the Senior Center is filled with activities for July: Water aerobics, Tuesday and Thursday, 11:30 a.m. at the Cohasset town pool; step aerobics, Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 7:30 a.m.; transportation is available to the Farmers' Market every Thursday; and you can play bridge every Wednesday at 1 p.m.

IT'S ALL GOOD NEWS

Please don't forget to call me with all of your news! Your vacations (upon your return please), your houseguests, your busy events, etc. It's all good news!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Transportation options

"Pssst — come here," said a boat commuter, calling us over while looking to see if anyone was listening.

"I'd like to see the train come back," he said in a whisper because Greenbush can be a politically incorrect topic when tied to Hingham.

While there's no doubt boat commuters love their boats, several told us on our jaunt from Hingham to Rowe's Wharf and back on Monday the train would be a valuable commuting option.

Take Dan Miele of Scituate, for example. He works at 40 Rowe's Wharf, just a few minutes walk from the dock. His wife, on the other hand, works across town. If she takes the boat to work, she'd have to walk to the Blue Line and then switch to the Green Line. So, she commutes by car.

As Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate and possibly Braintree and Weymouth selectmen ready for their summit on Greenbush — we hope they'll think of the beleaguered commuter.

We worry the proposed meeting among the towns could set the stage for a new anti-Greenbush push.

Hey, we readily admit that the blame for what appears to be a rise in the anti-train tide in our towns rests squarely on the MBTA's shoulders. The T has screwed up royally, especially in its recent dealings with Cohasset which took a positive approach with the train. Cohasset's Mitigation Committee set forth with a clear understanding that its goal was not to oppose the train but to work with the T to get the best possible deal for Cohasset regarding noise, pollution abatement and safety measures. But what it got in return is a lot of inaccurate data and a lack of cooperation from the agency.

Nevertheless, putting the T's bad behavior aside, we're curious as to how many selectmen or other town appointees dealing with Greenbush issues commute to the city?

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we don't. So while Monday's trek to Boston and back was a fun way to research a story on the commuter boats, it also made us wonder if the voice of the commuter is being heard in the ongoing train debate.

There's no doubt in our minds that America's love affair with the automobile as a means of getting to work in the city lost its passion years ago.

After all, with car prices rivaling the down payment for a home — who wants to subject their state-of-the-art vehicles to the terrors of expressway traffic and infamous Massachusetts drivers?

As Brian Morris, a physician, of Hingham told us, "Every time I drive, it's a horrible experience. So awful, that I don't know how people do it on a daily basis."

Dr. Morris said the train would be a nice option because he prefers not to take the boat in rough weather.

And Janet Rose of Weymouth said when she has to work late, she'd like the option of being able to take the train home.

There are undoubtedly thousands of others — who don't have the option of commuting by boat like Mr. Miele's wife — for whom the train would be a blessing.

During train talks, selectmen should keep in mind the simple fact that — while we all want safety, less pollution and minimal noise — Greenbush is really about providing public transportation options.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Farmer's Market keeps growing!

TO THE EDITOR:

Thanks to so many supporters and volunteers, the Cohasset Village Farmers' Market is enjoying its best season. The Village Revitalization Committee of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is a proud sponsor of the market, which was created as part of their ongoing efforts to revitalize the village business district. We encourage you to stop by and enjoy the fresh fruits, vegetables, flowers, plants, baked goods, live music, cooking demonstrations and occasional face painting and pony rides for the kids. We have more than 20 vendors participating in this year's market. Don't forget, the market happens every Thursday from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. on the Common.

The chamber is indebted to Anna Abbruzzese and Barbara Anglin for organizing the market for the third year in a row. Every Thursday you can find Anna and Barbara spending their valuable time organizing the vendors and running the market. If you see them around, please give them a well-deserved thank you.

There are many to thank. Ruth Delay, Colly Gear and Cosimo Cambi are quick to answer the call if needed. Emily Malone and Domenic Micarelli for giving cooking demonstrations. The following help every week by putting the small road signs out on the day of the market: Adrienne McCarthy, Mary Goodwin, Walter Ross, Ham Tewksbury, Leo's Exxon, Olympic Texaco and Reflections Antiques. We would also like to acknowledge the following town officials and departments for their invaluable assistance and support: Board of Selectmen, Town Manager, Health Department, Police Department, Fire Department and Steve Wigmore for providing the electricity. Thanks to the Cohasset Mariner, The Patriot Ledger and Media One for helping us spread the word about the market. We would especially like to thank the residents who live around the Common and are impacted by the market activity. Their patience and understanding is greatly appreciated.

The following businesses and individuals have generously contributed to the Farmers' Market Sponsorship Program: W. T. Barnes Mulch & Stone, South Shore Art Center, The Yoga Center, Rockland Trust, Cards & Shards, Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray, Law Office of Tom Callahan, The Goodale Company, Cohasset Travel, Nan and Denny Roth, French Memories, Bed & Breakfast of Cohasset, Aquarius Sunrooms, Inc., Hunneman Real Estate, Edward D. Jones Investments, Democratic Town Committee, Red Lion Inn, Hassan Sign Shop, Hallmark 100, Donna Green Studio, Abb Optical, Mary Marciniak, Nuth'n More Natural and Hillbilly Acres.

And finally, thanks to all of you who make the market possible by supporting the many different vendors every week.

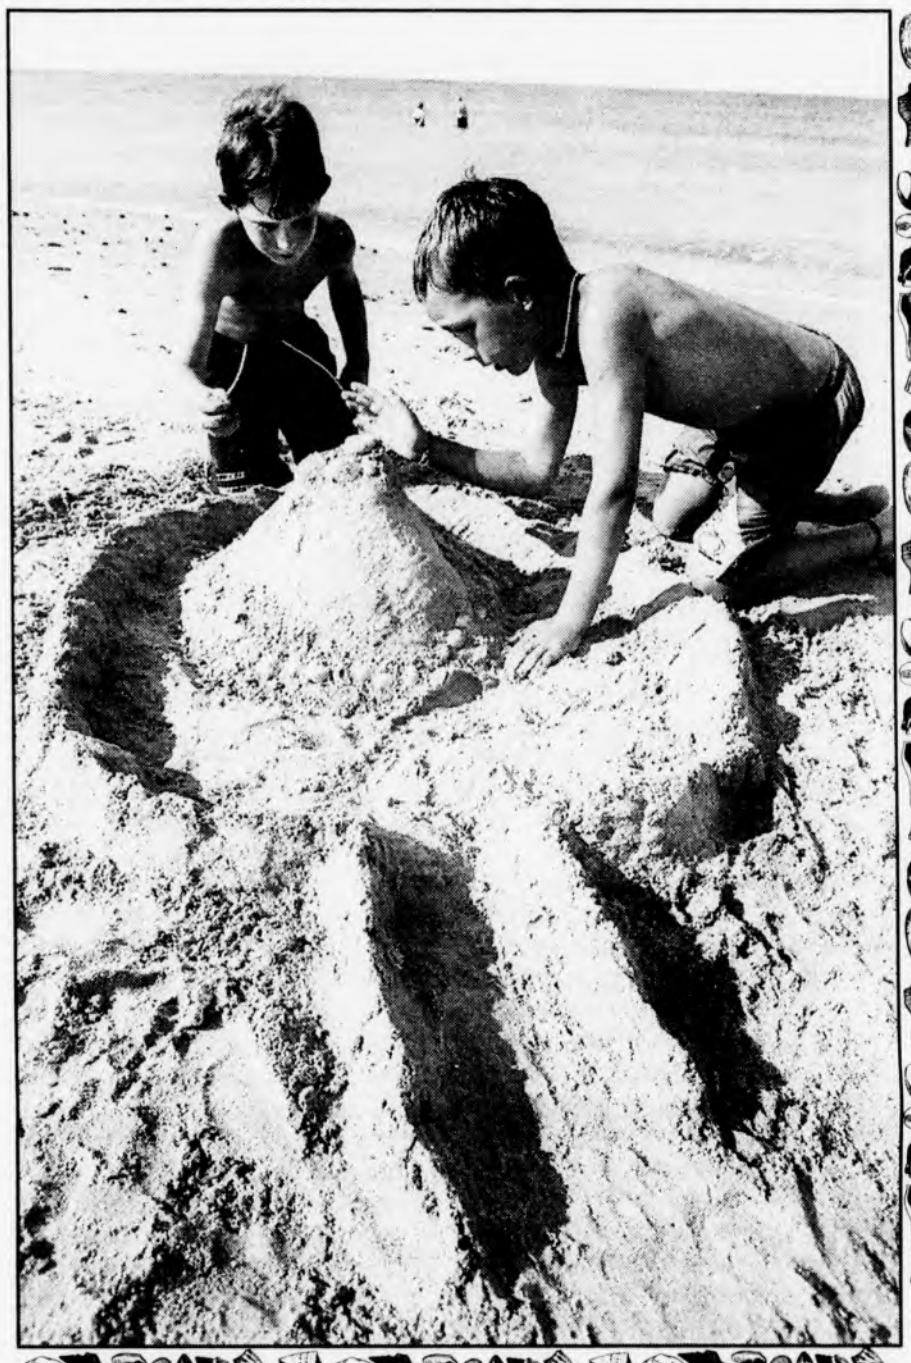
Rep. Murray to seek reelection

Saying that she looks forward to a campaign of "issues and ideas that will take us into the next century," and to the opportunity to "continue the old-fashioned public service that never goes out of style," state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has announced her campaign for re-election to the 3rd Plymouth District which includes Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

A United States Marine veteran, former Cohasset selectman and Housing Authority chairman, Girl Scout Leader, Cub Scout Den mother, CYO Advisor and American Red Cross Home Service Chairman, Rep. Murray has made public service her life and accessibility and constituent services her priority as a legislator.



"You can't do this job effectively unless you are out there, among the people, hearing what they have to say, knowing what is going on in their lives and neighborhoods," Murray said.

Murray is the ranking member on the Committee on Counties and the Committee on Local Affairs and was the first woman elected president of the Massachusetts Legislators' Association. She has also served on the Committees on Human Services and Elderly Affairs, Taxation and Ethics during her tenure as state representative. Murray is also a member of the Committee on Third Reading. Among her many legislative appointments, Murray has served as Chairman on the Special Committee to study building problems at the Boston Harbor campus of the University of Massachusetts, is a member of the special Committee to study County Government and the Special Committee on Veterans.

Catamaran to be added to commuter boat fleet and food service bars on both decks and is fully accessible, will reduce the 45 minute trip by about 15 minutes.

A second catamaran for the Hingham-Boston commute is slated to come on line in October.

Monday's packed homeward bound voyage on the John J. Doherty where commuters sunned themselves on the deck, slept, read novels or newspapers, did needlepoint or chatted at the bar seemed a far cry from the boat wars of last summer.

A year ago, Hingham commuter boat riders found themselves at the center of a firestorm of controversy when the MBTA which subsidizes the service awarded the five-year contract to a new provider and low bidder, Boston Harbor Cruises. On a hot summer evening tempers flared as commuters staged a rally at Hewitt's Cove airing their complaints about the new service with T and state officials.

The prior carrier subsequently joined with Mass. Bay Lines to form the Hingham Commuterboat which tried to compete with the subsidized T boats during peak times. But the Hingham Commuterboat pulled the plug on the service this spring when they didn't attract the numbers to stay competitive although Mass. Bay Lines continues to run several trips a day.

In the height of the battle for customers, the competing companies tried to lure passengers by offering free doughnuts, croissants and coffee in the morning and other gastronomic delights in the evening for the return trip.

Once winning the contract, Harbor Cruises scrambled to get its fleet to the standard — including the cushioned seats and comfortable cabins — that the discriminating Hingham boat commuters were accustomed to. And although some commuters still say the boats and service are inferior to the prior carrier's — the boats do offer more comforts than most forms of public transportation.

The Doherty, which staffers from The Hingham Journal took this week, is equipped with a snack bar (beer and wine are $1), airplane-like seating, rest-rooms and carpeting. Prints of clipper ships adorn the walls and so does a wallpaper border that picks up the color scheme in the seats and carpeting. When the weather is fine there are ample portable chairs on the top deck for those seeking fresh air and sunshine.

Senior deck hand Seth Batchelder expected to find some animosity when he first came on board last winter, but said the boat battles of a year ago are now just a memory for most commuters.

"I've been here five months and I've heard nothing," said Batchelder who points out there is really nothing to compare with commuting by boat.

"Where else can you take the T which is cleaned after every single trip, which has bathroom facilities and offers coffee?

"It's a different life," he said. "You miss all the traffic, can park for free in Hingham and hang out on the boat."

Janet Rose of Weymouth has been commuting by boat for five years. Formerly from Franklin where she commuted by train, Rose said she would like to see the Greenbush railroad return so there are more choices for commuters.

"More options would be nice, you don't want to travel Route 3," she said. "This is beautiful, there are bathrooms, coffee and tea. It's a comfortable commute.

"The rail is the same way. I got used to the train, you never knew it was there," she said.

Scituate's Dan Nolan travels from Hingham to Rowe's Wharf and then he takes another boat to the Charlestown Navy Yard where he works. He's looking forward to the catamaran which will be a time saver. But despite his 1-1/2 hour daily trek (each way), he would not consider going back to the automobile.

"It's still worth it," Nolan said. "When you drive, it feels like you started work hours ago."

Greenbush summit agenda

The Hingham Board of Selectmen sent a letter to the chairmen of the Cohasset and Scituate boards asking for clarification of the upcoming meeting's agenda.

"The location, the list of participants and the agenda now differ from what we understood would be the case" when the board accepted an invitation to the meeting on July 1, said the letter from Hingham Selectmen Chairman Katharine Reardon.

The letter suggested scheduling a preliminary meeting of board representatives to discuss and plan the format of the upcoming joint meeting, including where the meeting would be held, by whom it would be run and what the agenda would be.

"Rather than the detailed mitigation agenda proposed by the Cohasset Board, our assumption was that the discussion would be broad and that all views could be candidly expressed," the letter stated. "The broad range of potential participants and their differing goals and expectations suggest that further preparation is necessary before such a meeting takes place."

As of Wednesday — when the Mariner went to press — Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Roseanne McMorris said it was unclear whether the meeting would be held or delayed so a preparatory meeting could be held. She said that Weymouth and Braintree officials had not yet responded to the initial meeting invitation.

Scituate Selectmen Chairman Susan Phippen questioned how productive the meeting would be — if held at all — with obvious dissension among the ranks.

"If we're having this much difficulty arranging this meeting, I don't know how productive it's going to be," Phippen said.

The meeting is open to the public and all members of the Scituate board are expected to attend, Phippen said. Although concerned about Hingham's possible absence from the meeting, Phippen said she is "not adverse to sitting and talking with them."

At its June 23 meeting, the Scituate Board of Selectmen recognized the need for what member Joseph Norton called a "summit" meeting with neighboring Cohasset and Hingham.

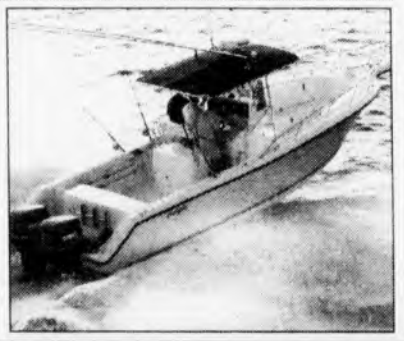
Cohasset officials had the same idea that week and took responsibility for hosting the meeting. Members decided to add the towns of Weymouth and Braintree to the list of invited guests since they are also Greenbush corridor towns.

McMorris said the board included noise, vibration and air quality on the agenda because they are issues common to the towns invited to the meeting.

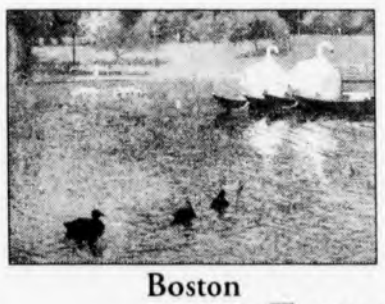
"We're trying to deal with the 'T' as a group on this. We thought we might be a little more effective as a team," McMorris said.

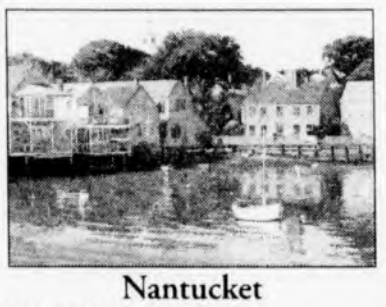
In November 1995, former Gov. William Weld announced the plan to restore passenger service — which was discontinued in 1959 — to the South Shore. Since the decision came down, few regional meetings including local town officials have been held on the proposal. No organized meetings of towns' boards of selectmen have been held.

In recent months, various evaluations of the train's environmental impact have been released, claiming that the MBTA's plans are flawed. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers as well as the towns of Scituate and Cohasset have filed reports pointing out inaccuracies in the MBTA's environmental impact study.



Many residents along the line have also been unhappy with the information provided on the project and the responses they have received from the MBTA about their concerns.





The MBTA still has not announced what site will be used for a train layover station in Scituate. Scituate Selectmen have voted to oppose all proposed sites including a plan to use the town's landfill.

Despite repeated attempts at cooperation, Cohasset officials have "hit a brick wall" with the MBTA, McMorris said.

Lamberts Lane school bus issue stalled

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

School bus service down Lamberts Lane by September appeared to be a dead issue Thursday as the school board acted to try to at least prevent the bus question from turning into a "hot potato" between selectmen and the school committee. After months of discussion by both selectmen and the school board, the possible solutions have come down to only two options—either making Lamberts Lane a public street instead of a private way or gaining an agreement with the Cohasset Golf Club to allow the bus to use its parking lot for a turnaround.

Previously, the club officials did not favor granting permission because of legal liability unless the town agreed to "hold the club harmless" if an accident happened.

But that condition was unacceptable to the school board because it would open the door to lawsuits against the schools in the event of property or personal damage. Now it is up to selectmen, school board member Joseph McElroy said, to cut a decent deal with the club or allow Lamberts Lane to be accepted as a public street.

Selectmen have sided with the Private Ways committee and said Lamberts Lane is not an accepted street but a private way. If it were accepted, the town could ask the public works department to produce an engineering solution to the grade problems. But public money is not used to repair or rebuild private ways.

"I don't think we have the wherewithal of charter to resolve that problem when elected boards disagree. We all want a solution. Sooner or later we're going to have a tragedy on that street."

JOSEPH MCELROY, SCHOOL BOARD MEMBER

However, the planning board has said Lamberts Lane is a public street based on information provided by a previous town clerk. That certification was produced by a developer who said it meant his plans did not come under the rules for subdivisions.

"The planning board did not want to take the lead," said McElroy who looked to that board for help with the Lamberts Lane dilemma. "The selectmen did want to take the lead." The difficulty was beyond the school board's power to resolve.

"I don't think we have the wherewithal of charter to resolve that problem when elected boards disagree," he said. "We all want a solution. Sooner or later we're going to have a tragedy on that street."

School board member Mark DeGiacomo doubted the selectmen would do more on Lamberts Lane.

"The reality is, they're not going to," he said. Other school committee members affirmed they had a "moral obligation" to make the trip to school safe for the children even though the alternatives appeared to be few.

A turnaround at the end of the lane was ruled out due to safety issues. The school department also nixed a plan to run a smaller bus for Lamberts Lane.

"We agree a smaller bus is not economically practical," McElroy said.

Taking a step back in time

be a few separate chapters focusing on the schools or churches, but she isn't yet sure.

"This needs a strong chronological framework because I want to tell the history of the town in an orderly fashion," Dormitzer said.

So, what kind of information might end up in the book? Dormitzer provided a little sample of a few events that have caught her attention.

"Between 1950 and 1960, the population jumped 57 percent," Dormitzer said. "This had a great impact on the town and placed a lot of pressure on the schools and the town. Another interesting event is the increasing role of state government in local affairs as agencies like the Department of Environmental Protection became involved in Cohasset's environmental actions."

One event that stands out for Dormitzer from the 1947-1960 period was a decision made at the 1947 annual town meeting to sell a 20-acre portion of the town farm to veteran's returning from World War II at not more than $100 a lot. The town paid to develop the roads and infrastructure, and this event signaled the beginning of the break-up of big estates and large tracts of land in town. The farm itself was also an interesting piece of history because it served as the town's poor house prior to the creation of social security.

"I really like looking at the town as it was in the 1950s and the great changes that took place after that," she said. "Before the fifties, it was a small town and everyone felt like they knew each other. Then the commuters came and Cohasset became a residential suburb. It's still a beautiful old town, but a lot of old-timers are nostalgic for the past."

Back in the present, Dormitzer will continue to compile her material while the residents of Cohasset live and create history. Just don't expect to see too much of Dormitzer except for her interviews. She'll be busy for quite a while reading old, dusty tomes, surfing the Internet for information and adding to her mountain of information.

'Anastasia' tickets to go on sale

Tickets go on sale for the Children's Drama Workshop production of "Anastasia" Monday, July 27, at the Cohasset Recreation Department, Town Hall.

Tickets are $5 in advance and $7 at the door. The production involves 92 children from Cohasset and surrounding towns. Performances are Tuesday, Aug. 11, at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and Wednesday, Aug. 12, at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Paint the town plein-air

Christopher Gallery, located at Jonathan Livingston Square, on Route 3A in Cohasset, announces its next event — Paint the Town Plein-Air. It is a community-oriented, educational group show including many of its family of artists.

A double feature event is planned for Saturday, July 18. The public is encouraged to see the many artists paint outdoors (plein-air) near the Village and Harbor in Cohasset from noon to 4 p.m. Location maps will be available at the gallery. There will be an open house reception in the evening from 7 to 10 p.m. where collectors are invited to purchase the finished paintings and visit with the artists. (Careful, wet paint!)

Last year, the gallery made a donation to the Cohasset Food Pantry of $750 for paintings sold. This year, part of the proceeds will benefit the Art Scholarship Fund.

Artists painting the town plein-air will be: William Bartlett, Jared Clackner, T.A. Charron, Robert Farris Jr., Michael Graves, Lois Griffel, John Kilroy, Margaret McWethy, Diane Scott, Douglas Smith and more. Guest artists: Allan R. Banks, Joan DaGradi, Dean Morrissey and Marjorie Whorf.

Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Collectors, students and browsers are welcome to visit the ongoing selection of paintings by artists including: Francis Golden, Robert Douglas Hunter, Tom Hughes, Jim Lamb, Kevin Macpherson, Clement Micarelli, William F. Reese, Timothy Thies and Charles Vickery.

Cohasset Garden Club helps landscape Turkey Hill

The Cohasset Garden Club has announced a gift of $5,000 to the Trustees of Reservations for landscaping at Turkey Hill, the property recently purchased jointly by the trustees and the towns of Cohasset and Hingham, the Hingham Land Conservation Trust, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the State of Massachusetts and approximately 300 individual donors.

The gift represents the club's participation in Project 2000, a national undertaking by the Garden Club of America to commemorate the beginning of a new millenium.

"Member clubs all over the country are planting tress, starting gardens, developing education projects and finding new ways to celebrate the richness of our environment and our hope for its future," said Mary Hartshorne, club president "By providing funding to enhance the entrance to Turkey Hill, we want to show our commitment to conservation and to the spirit of cooperation embodied in this project."

In addition to this special project, the Cohasset Garden Club participates in a variety of horticulture and conservation activities, including the creation and maintenance of gardens at the Historic Museum and the Lightkeeper's Residence.

A visit to Gallops and George's Islands

The Cohasset Historical Society plans "A Visit to Gallops and George's Islands" Sunday, Aug. 9.

The adult member price is $20, non-member $22 and child reservations (under 12 years old) $15.

Please make checks payable to Cohasset Historical Society, and send them to the Society at 14 Summer St., Cohasset, 02025.

The telephone number is (781) 383-1434 or 383-1448.

The boat will depart from Hewitt's Cove in Hingham at 10 a.m. Check-in is at 9:15 a.m.

The boat will return to Hewitt's Cove at 5:45 p.m.

O'Sullivan responds to call for pitching arms

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Just about everyone has heard about the "Man of Steel" from Metropolis!!

How many have heard about the "Man of Iron" from Cohasset?

You're about to hear it here. The "Man of Iron" is Jim O'Sullivan, the number four pitcher on the Cohasset American Legion Post 118 baseball team.

Some times in the "olden" days when major league baseball pitchers were not involved with multi-million dollar contracts they were called upon to pitch back-to-back games. Thus, the term "Iron Man Role" came about.

If you can think back more than 40 years ago, a pitcher named Don Newcomb, if the Brooklyn Dodgers pitched both ends of a double header and won both.

O'Sullivan, a senior to be at Cohasset High, did something similar last week, when he stepped in and pitched a complete game on Thursday and came right back on Friday to pitch another complete game.

A crush of games due to a number of earlier rainouts found Cohasset coach Scott Arnold out of pitchers.

"O'Sullivan asked to pitch the next day's game," following his Thursday win. "If the kid was willing to step up and give it a shot, I had no alternative but to go along with him."

"It was really something to see. Halfway through that second game he was throwing nothing but garbage. His arm had just about given up, but he kept getting batters out with his soft deliveries.

"It was really something to see. The kid pitched 14 innings and won the two games and pulled us out of a big hole. We really needed those wins."

Due to a host of early spring rainouts, Cohasset like a number of other Legion teams in the area, found itself with just about an impossible schedule last week. Playing six games in four days.

The schedule had them playing one game on Tuesday, a double header on Wednesday, a double header on Thursday and a single game on Friday.

When all was said and done, the squad had won four of the six games, two of them coming through the efforts of O'Sullivan.

On Tuesday, they beat Canton. On Wednesday, Arnold's team played two at home, beating Randolph in the opener and losing to West Roxbury in the second.

On Thursday, they traveled to Milton Academy losing to the Milton Legion and then getting right back on the bus for a ride to Quincy.

Victory number four Friday was against Weymouth.

When the road show was finally over, Post 118 was left with an overall record of six wins, 11 losses and one tie, and an excellent shot at making the playoffs.

Braintree at 12-1 and Milton at 11-4 were locked into the playoffs, while remaining three spots were pretty much up for grabs.

Cohasset swim team meets its match with Marshfield

The day began with a robin's egg blue sky, but the clouds eventually prevailed and Cohasset met a sobering match in the powerful Marshfield swim team. As soon as everyone arrived at the meet, there was a different feeling in the air as each team checked out its opponent with attitude. With some mild discomfort, Cohasset played the hospitable host and let Marshfield choose the odd lanes (1,3,5) which are the big blue's psychological "home turf." We can swim in even-numbered lanes! The final score of this competitive match was Marshfield 359 and Cohasset 264. We'll address this temporary setback when we get a second chance at Marshfield in the championships.

Highlights of the match were the strong races from the older boys, a phenomenal race by Greg himself (our assistant coach) that inspired his protégés, and solid performances by the girls who met some real competition. Sarah Markert challenged the 8 and under girls with the promise of receiving "Wilbur Wheels" if they beat the Marshfield team in their age group. The swimmers especially enjoyed the free swim time since the two teams took up nearly every square inch of the pool as they jumped in for a refresher at the half-way point. The spirit of the Cohasset swim team came alive as the bystanders raised the usual pitch of their support to combat the tough competition.

Did you know that the "I.M" in the results that follow stands for "individual medley?" Chris Flynn explained that this involves a single swimmer who races one length of butterfly, followed by backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle. Swimmers who do this medley must be in top form. How many laps does each age group do each morning? The answer is 15 to 20 or more. Have you tried this lately? It's excellent exercise, but if you haven't been doing laps in a while, expect some huffing and puffing. These Cohasset swimmers are in good shape!

Swimmers tips for this week: Work on stroke precision. If you keep a steady, consistent stroke, you lose less time and keep your body tight, aimed for the finish. Avoid slapping the hands into the water with freestyle and instead cut evenly into the pool water. Bend the elbows and slice. If you have a problem, younger swimmers, crashing into the lane lines with backstroke, learn your individual stroke count from the backstroke flags. This will give you the confidence to complete the event instead of worrying about hitting your head at the finish.

Here are the results from Friday's meet against Marshfield:

In the boys 8 and Under Medley Relay Austen Lanzillotti, Ryan Poh, Jon Drybanksi and Wesley Ulmer came in third, the team of Tyler Kelly, Chris Kuppens, Thomas Lemaire and Trip Harper came in fourth, and the team of Adam Yeager, Michael Grimm, Owne Stevenson and Cameron Cunningham came in fifth.

In the girls 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Megan Sacks, Abigail Markert, Alyssa Campbell and Emma Hernan came in first, the team of Elizabeth Spelman, Meg Anderson, Samantha Lehr and Samantha Fortin came in third, and the team of Maura Regan, Alexx Hoholik, Rebecca Dickinson and Ellie Baugmartin came in sixth.

In the boys 10 and Under Medley Relay the team of Noah Wilcox, Dan McCarthy, Parker Berg and Zach Markert came in second, and the team of Colin Conway, Ben Flynn, Nils Sceery and Tyler Kennedy came in fifth.

In the girls 10 and Under Medley Relay the team of Roxanne Tehranian, Caren Garber, Lindsay Durkin and Mary Previte came in third, the team of Jessica Wheelwright, Emilie Shea, Caitlin Sanchez and Kate Spelman came in fifth, and the team of Charlotte Sida, Michelle Lemaire, Vanessa

Picking the right lure for the right fish

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Kevin Conway's bass swung from the scale, dropping it over 22 pounds, while we talked about the lure he had used to catch it. He had been trolling the channel north of Point Allerton, an umbrella rig loaded with 9er shad in the water behind him. Kevin related that he had seen a group of fish following the rig moments before the big one crashed it.

The amazing thing, said Kevin, was the fish we caught had managed to grab 3 of the 4 shad imitations in its mouth! Talk about hungry.

What other lures are doing well so far this season? The umbrella rigged 9er style is a proven producer. Straight bar rigs can be rigged similarly. There are a wide variety of sizes and patterns of fish that can be attached to the rigs. Kalins and 9ers both produce several realistic patterns imitating mackerel, pogies and others in the food chain.

Only the lack of imagination limits how the bars and umbrellas can be rigged. Small rubber squids are available in a rainbow of colors. Larger squids are used for trolled tuna bars. Green, amber, natural, black and a host of wild new color combinations make the bars look more like art than functional fish finders. But they work.

Also in the bar and umbrella rigging box we find the simple teaser. Frequently they are rigged with a long shank hook with split rings directly to the bar. Experimenting with longer teasers, Zing-type skirted teasers, and teasers dropped back on wire or mono leaders can create different looks.

Four hoochies on the corners with a dropped back Rapala chasing up the center is my favorite of this type of rig.

Another favorite type of lure is the swimmer. Literally hundreds of swimmers are produced in every imaginable color, pattern, size, material and swim design. From shiny black backed Rebels, just over an inch long to the monster Rapala 26 Series that measures well over a foot long, the choices are endless, fascinating, and truly mind-boggling for

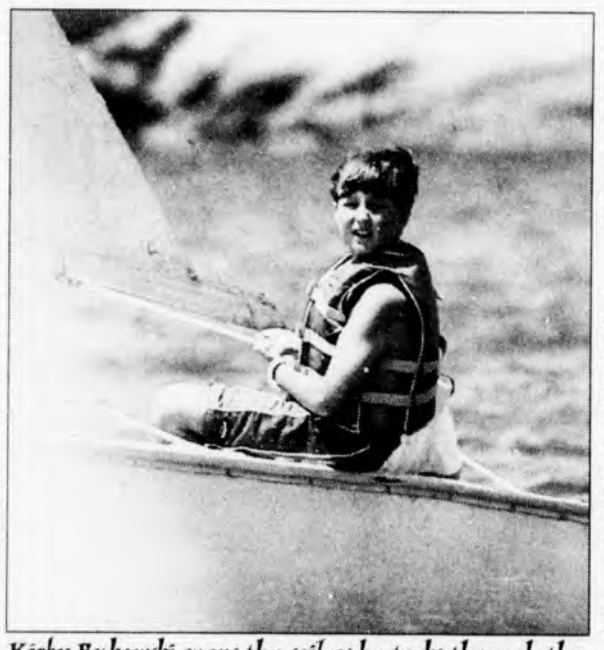
On the water with the Cohasset Sailing Club



By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The words "Commodore" and "sailing" mean a great deal more to Cohasset's Chuck Peterson than just a reference to some really tacky pop music that came out of the 1980s.

They instead are a way of life for Peterson, a life-long sailor who has been the Commodore at the Cohasset Sailing Club for two years now.

Sitting on the porch at the club while enjoying a view of the harbor that could only be properly described in a Jimmy Buffett song, Peterson spoke about how important the founders of the CSC are to the success that it is enjoying today.

"Without the people who stepped forward in the beginning to put this together in 1960, we wouldn't be anywhere near where we are today," said Peterson. "You can still see some of the original organizers checking up on us from time to time.

Kirby Bukowski mans the sail as he tacks through the course at the entrance to Cohasset Harbor.

"The men and women that laid the groundwork for this club really deserve all of the credit for what we have been able to do for the children of Cohasset," he added. "We are just here to keep the ball rolling and get the word out to people about our little diamond in the rough.

"We continue to be a 100 percent volunteer operation to this day," said Peterson, who grew up sailing with friends during the summer at Gun Rock in Hull. "We do have a paid staff, but we do it all with private funding."

Today, the sailing club entertains more than 150 Cohasset youngsters each day as instructors send the sailors of all experience levels out to learn their craft. From initial purchases and donations of six 12-foot Sprite's for the kids to practice on, the club now boasts an impressive stable of boats including 10 Mercury's, three Laser's, two 420's and a Flying Scot.

"Over the years the club has become a tradition in this town. It's almost a rite of summer that at one time or another every kid who lives in Cohasset takes advantage of the opportunity we provide here," explained Peterson. "The club is based on the premise that we would give every child in Cohasset the chance to learn how to sail with low cost accessibility to the water..

"Some stay and some don't stay, but we are always here as an option for the kids."

The sailing club opens its door almost immediately after school closes down each year but this year will only be running until August 24. They have to be all packed up and stowed away by September 1 so the harbor dredging project can move forward without impediment.

Even with the shortened season, all the CSC has to do is supply the boats and they know that the youngsters will come for a summer of fun on the water.

"The younger groups are the ones really big this season. That's a trend we see all over town with above average numbers for that age group," said Peterson. "The first- and second-year sailors are really getting into the program."

For those young sailors the appeal is simple. A summer spent on the beach with your friends while learning to sail while picking up some independence along the way.

"The program has these kids learning about responsibility and respect and they don't even know it," said Peterson with a chuckle. "Sailing is great day out in the sunshine and the fresh air for a kid, but the more long-term benefit are that it teaches a kid how to make good decisions at an early age.

"Anytime you are out on a boat you need a have a healthy respect for the ocean and the knowledge that you are out of your element," he added. "Something as little as leaving a dock is a decision you have to make when operating a boat. They might not realize it at the time, but they become more and more responsible for their own actions as they become better sailors."

As they work through the program, the students are afforded opportunities to see how they compete against the other students as well as some boatmen from other local sailing clubs.

Some young sailors enjoy a picturesque view of Cohasset Harbor.

The Waaser Cup, named after former CSC member Charlie Waaser, is where the Skippers, Captains and Sailing Masters go out every Wednesday after in teams of two or three in the Mercury boats to compete against each other through the summer to determine a winner.

As well, held each Sunday night are competitions for the Stanton Cup, where family members team together to try and take the top overall prize at the end of the season.

"A lot of us here have done this race with our kids at one time or another," said Peterson. "It's probably my favorite of all the races. It's a great opportunity for the parents and kids to learn a lot about each other while having some fun on the water."

In addition, the sailing club is also involved with a racing series with many of the other sailing clubs around the area.

Cohasset swim team glides past Hanover for big win

The Cohasset Swim Team made short work of their competition against Hanover. The final score was Cohasset, 313; and Hanover; 192. While it was something of a rout, most swimmers aimed to beat individual times. A few of the Hanover 17 and under boys decided to do some hotdog dives to embellish their efforts in a no-win situation. All those on the sidelines enjoyed the extra splash.

The end of the year banquet and dance for the swim team is scheduled for Aug. 7 at the Cohasset High School cafeteria. The dinner and awards will be from 5 to 7:30 p.m. and the dance will follow until about 10 p.m. in the school gym. We look forward to having all parents participate in this big event. Save the date now.

Here are the results from last Wednesday's meet against Hanover:

In the boys 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Kenny Muir, Austen Lanzilloti, Alexander Hunt and Cameron Cunningham came in first, the team of Ryan Poh, Adam Yeager, Chris Cuppens and Trip Harper came in second, and the team of Teddy Galligan, Michael Grimm, Tyler Kelly and F. Wheelwright came in third.

In the girls 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Megan Sacks, Abigail Markert, Alyssa Campbell and Emma Hernan came in first, the te[illegible] of Elizabeth Spelman, Meg And[illegible] son, Samantha Lehr and Samantha Fortin came in third, and the team of Maura Regan, Alexx Hoholik, Claire McCarthy and Kaley Madge came in fourth.

In the boys 10 and Under Medley Relay the team of Noah Wilcox, Dan McCarthy, Parker Berg and Jeffrey Brown came in first, and the team of Cory Faber, Bryce Rafferty, Mike Pecca and Nils Sceery came in second.

In the girls 10 and Under Medley Relay the team of Caitlin Sanchez, Caren Garber, Lindsay Durkin and Kate Spelman came in first, the team of Charlotte Sida, Roxanne Tehranian, Michelle Madge, and Caitlin Hurley came in third, and the team of Caitlin O'Connell, Whitney Condon, Jessica Wheelwright and Kaleigh Swain came in sixth.

the beginner.

When looking to use a swimmer, it is probably best to match them to what your are seeking for fish, what kind of conditions you expect to find, and how you plan to employ the lure.

Saltwater fishing generally calls for larger swimmers in the 6-7 inch range with colors typical of the environment. Mackerel patterns, blue and black back patterns are common.

Some lures now such as the Bombers and Mambos have very realistic herring characteristics and do quite well. Larger plugs such as these work well for trolling. Lures with plastic lips will run from 2-4 feet under the surface depending upon the speed they are retrieved or trolled. Heavier metal-lipped trollers will run as deep as 10 or more feet again dependent on speed.

Those seeking even greater depth can employ inline weights or trolling weights. Others may use wire line or leadcore line to help get greater depth. Once trolling from the Tar-Pouch north to the 21 Buoy aboard Ed Corbo's Easy Rider, we experimented with trolling weights and found the combination of a 6 ounce trolling lead and a Rapala Magnum CD 18 was kissing the bottom at 45 feet. Other ways to increase depth is the use of diving planers or downriggers.

Those who wish to cast around the ledges and in the rivers, harbors and estuaries, will find shallow diving swimmers more to their liking. Smaller profile lures in the 4- to six-inch size range, and decorated with natural coloring seem to do quite well in these areas.

Rebels and Bombers are particularly effective. Others in this group include Mambos, Normans and smaller Rapalas.

Again the depth is a function of design, most having a small plastic lip to limit them from running deep in the weed near shore. Nothing beats the thrill of seeing a big fish following the lure, mere inches away, and suddenly have it gulped out of sight! The fight is on!

Another large group of lures to consider is the spoons. A spoon is generally made of metal with a ring on the lead end to attach your line or leader, and a treble or single style hook bringing up the rear. Most spoons are designed to be cast and retrieved. Some of the popular models are Kastmasters, Hopkins, Cleos, Thomas' and Luhr Jensen's. These lures are available in a wide variety of sizes, colors and patterns.

Casting, letting them sink a bit, and retrieving at a varying rate is a good way to fish them. Others may choose to jig them in schools of mackerel and bluefish or off the bottom for fluke. Others that fit into this family somewhat are the big jigging lures such as the Bead Chain and Solvroken cod jigs and larger wobbling spoons such as Accettas and the alewife types.

Stripers love the big trolled spoons and bluefish slam them with no regard for delicacy whatsoever.

Rounding the corner we come to poppers. Whether constructed from wood or styro or plastic, these lures are especially effective in shallow water areas when fish are feeding. Some ingenious patterns have been produced recently giving these lures a highly realistic look of baits.

Typically used by shore fishermen, these lures are cast far and retrieved with a variety of reeling and popping sequences designed to entice the hungry striper or blue to take a whack at it. Boaters will use these lures in the green water wash around the ledges and jetties to get the big ones. Most are designed to float such as the Atoms, Gibbs and Zilonis plugs.

Others have more weight in them than buoyancy allows but the distance cast tradeoff is worth it. Cotton Cordell Red Spots are a sinker if you don't keep them moving. Most poppers are distinguished by a small cup in the forward end of the lure that creates noisy splashing as it's retrieved.

Others rely on the angler to create a dancing splashing retrieve through their skill at handling the rod. Sizewise the big poppers range up to four ounces. Those fishing the inshore creeks and rivers may wish to size down to poppers as light as the 3/8 ouncer that Atom produces A light rod and a 3/8 popper and you're setting yourself up to test your angling skills.

Bucktails and parachutes are popular lures that have a lot of history behind them. A molded chunk of lead with a bucktail of some fashion and colors of every imagination pretty well defines this group of lures. Frequently dressed with a pork rind or squid strip, these lures are dropped to and hopped along the bottom to catch the hungry eye of feeding bass. They may be as small as a Reliable 1/4 ounce or as big as a mammoth 16 ounce C&C parachute.

Then there are tube and worm rigs, and flies, and spinners and . . . I think it's time to go fishing.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

O'Sullivan responds to call for pitching arms

According to the schedule, the Legion playoffs were slated to get underway on July 15, but it was still unknown if all the teams would have made up their postponed games by that date.

As for the local nine, coach Arnold just kept repeating, "This club is fighting every inch of the way. They just hang in there and keep slugging away.

"No matter how the season turns out, I'm extremely proud of the kids and the effort they have been putting into the games."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

THE CONSERVATIVE APPROACH

Those who suffer from acute low-back pain are estimated to have a 50% chance of recovering without care. Which care improves these chances? A review of 25 controlled clinical trials of lumbar spinal adjustment by the RAND Corp. (among others) showed that patients with uncomplicated, acute low-back pain had a 17% greater likelihood of recovery within three weeks with spinal adjustment than without it. The study also showed that spinal adjustment increases the probability of recovery at three weeks by about one third. Considering that this conservative form of treatment for low back pain yields results, while more invasive measures (such as corticosteroid injections) were found to be ineffective, patients have every reason to make it their choice.

Do you suffer from low-back pain? Have you tried the drug-free, safe and gentle chiropractic approach? Maybe it's time you called SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We stress preventive health care for the entire family--experience the relief that chiropractic natural health care can bring you. Have regular spinal checkups to prevent the spine from establishing any abnormal conditions. Regular chiropractic adjustments can go a long way in keeping you in good health and comfort. Chiropractic doesn't cost--it pays! Our office is located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. I offer presentations on such important topics as "Raising a Healthy Drug-Free Family," "Back Safety in the Workplace," "Stress Reduction," and "Meeting the HealthCare Crisis Head-on." Call to find out more.

P.S. The study mentioned above indicated that patients with low-back pain and sciatic nerve irritation were 10% more likely to recover with spinal adjustment than without it.

SPORTS BRIEFS

More Cohasset athletes in the Bay State Games

Due to incomplete information supplied to the paper last week, some local residents who will be participating in the Bay State Games were not listed in last week's preview story.

Ken Leahy and Andrew Collins will be playing in the open lacrosse games, while Jaqueline Kahn, Adam Leahy and Matt Verrochi all are in the scholastic lacrosse division.

The Bay State Games kick off with opening ceremonies at the FleetCenter tonight (Thursday) and will continue for the next two weeks.

Cohasset men's softball league

It was a beautiful Sunday afternoon for the players, families, and friends. The league is shaping up although most of the players are not.

The Cell Boys (who had not won a game yet) exploded, for eleven runs in one inning! Jeff Pinkus was 6 for 6! They ended up losing 22-18 to the defending champs "Last Call."

Kenny Snow baffled the Who's on First team 23-3! His wife, Mary could not keep up with her score keeping sheet as the players kept circling the bases!

The Dog Pound submarined the Grinders in the late game. I don't know the score because I had to take my kids home.

Standings

Dog Pound	3-1
Last Call	3-1
Who's on First	3-1
Grinders	1-2

Hoop it up at basketball camp

The Cohasset Recreation Department in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will sponsor a Summer Basketball camp, under the direction of Ron Ford.

Big city rewards.
Small town appeal.

Community Newspaper Company (CNC) delivers local news and advertising to more than one million readers in 140 Massachusetts cities and towns. CNC's publications include dailies, weeklies and shoppers such as the Mariner newspapers, PennySavers, The Cape Codder and the Register, to name just a few. Our South Shore offices currently have openings for enthusiastic sales professionals who are willing to work in a fast-paced environment.

We currently have the following Marshfield-based positions available:

Inside Sales/Telemarketers
Enter the fast-paced and exciting world of advertising sales. This position will be responsible for selling new and servicing existing advertising accounts. Build relationships and assist customers with their plans for success. This challenging position requires at least one year of telemarketing experience, a high energy level and someone who can work as well independently as with a team of other professionals.

Sales Coordinators
Terrific entry level opportunity to join our dynamic sales team. Provide administrative and customer service support to a team of account executives. Assist in communication with clients, coordinating advertising proofs, complete insertion orders, research billing issues and provide phone support. Ideal candidates will have previous customer service experience, excellent phone manner and basic computer skills.

Reporter
Exciting and challenging entry-level fulll-time reporting position. We're looking for a self-starter who is competitive and knows how to write on deadline. Unique opportunity to cover town government, breaking news and feature stories. MS Word experience needed. Photography skills a plus.

Part-time Photographer
We are looking for experienced photographers to take on challenging assignments. We're looking for someone with an eye for photos, a nose for news and solid organizational skills. Permanent 20-hour position available. Some weekend and night assignments required.

Man assaults police officer at RTF

Responding to complaints from residents about people dumping trash without a valid permit, police officers were on hand at the RTF over the weekend checking for the stickers.

Sunday morning, police said Jack Silvia, 80, of 43 Border St., assaulted Officer James McLean who tried to question him about his sticker.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said Silvia — who has been charged with assault & battery with a dangerous weapon, assault & battery on a police officer, disorderly person, resisting arrest and malicious destruction of property over $250 — ripped the officer's shirt, hit him in the face and broke his classes.

Jackson said Silvia was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court where a plea of not guilty was entered on his behalf. A pre-trial conference is slated for 9 a.m., Sept. 16.

Police said Silvia sped by McLean in a 1988 Mazda pickup truck on his way into the RTF. When McLean caught up to Silvia, he told him could not leave his trash without a permit whereupon police said Silvia swore at McLean and struck him in the face with his free hand, Jackson said.

In a telephone interview, Silvia emphatically denied hitting the officer. He said the officers who were called to assist McLean broke his ribs because they were very sore. Silvia said he borrowed his son's truck to go to the dump. Although a sticker had been purchased for the truck, his son had not put it on the window, he explained.

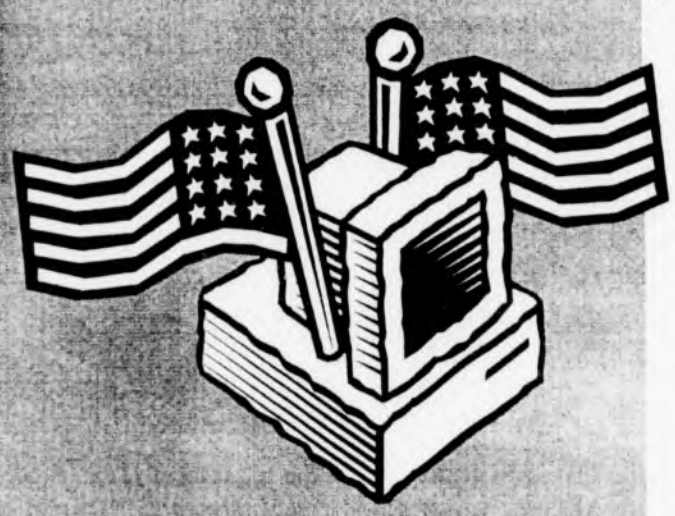
Despite the incident, police will continue to check vehicles for valid annual RTF permits which are for sale for $65 ($33 for senior citizens) at the RTF and at town hall.

Stolen car suspects caught

Two men who allegedly stole a 1995 BMW M3, valued at $26,000, from Cohasset Imports last week were apprehended in Weymouth later the same day.

Officer Richard Yocum said a break-in at the Route 3A dealership was reported at about 11:30 a.m., July 6. Investigation revealed that several sets of keys, an undermined amount of cash and the BMW were stolen.

At 2 p.m., police recovered a 1983 Chevy Malibu, allegedly stolen from Weymouth, in the woods almost across the street from Cohasset Imports.



Plymouth County Bureau of Investigation assisted in the investigation obtaining fingerprints from a window sill and the Malibu, Yocum said.

At about 7 p.m., Weymouth police pursued the stolen BMW and arrested Michael F. Lawson, 19, of 198 Lake St., East Weymouth and George Dabrolet, Jr., 18, of 27 Harrington Ave., Weymouth.

Cohasset police are waiting for lab results on the fingerprints but said they have probable cause to charge the two men with breaking & entering in the daytime, larceny of a motor vehicle, receiving stolen property and malicious damage to property.

The men are being held in the Dedham House of Correction, Yocum said.

Forum to pave way for a new sidewalk

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Next Thursday, members of the Village Task Force want a big turnout for their forum on the St. Stephen's sidewalk proposal.

They hope to keep the momentum going for village improvements while at the same time proceeding cautiously, so each revitalized piece of Cohasset's "downtown" fits into an overall vision.

The town has some wiggle room with the $165K state grant to pay for the sidewalk which will go along South Main Street from the edge of the common near the bus shelter to Elm Street. It doesn't have to spend the money for 18 months which allows time to fine-tune the design if need be, task force chairman Dean Rizzo said.

The task force met Tuesday to grapple with a game plan to present to the sidewalk forum slated for 7:30 p.m., July 30 in the town hall auditorium.

To overcome traffic flow concerns from the fire, police and highway departments, the group scaled back the proposed "big bump" in the sidewalk in front of Lilac Antiques. For the past two weeks, sandbags and barrels have delineated where the "small bump" would be in

Signs could help harbor access

Architect Jim Shipsky is hard at work designing a way to improve access to the harbor. The project is being paid for by a Coastal Access Grant awarded to the town.

At a meeting of the Village Task Force on Tuesday, Shipsky suggested a simple, inexpensive way to improve access is to post "public is welcome" signs at harbor areas that are town-owned.

He said many people may not realize that the lobsterman's wharf and sailing club on Government Island, the Hagerty Property off Parker Avenue, Lawrence Wharf off Border Street and the wharf between Kimball's and the Roy property on Margin Street are town-owned.

"Something as simple as five signs would drastically increase public access to the water," he said.

Shipsky said he would like to make the harbor "as wonderful as the common is" in its feeling of ownership and accessibility by town residents.

His report to the task force is due in September.

Allan Banks of Tampa, Florida found the harbor to be the perfect subject for his "plein air" painting.

Art showcase is a breath of fresh air

By Stacie Charbonneau Gregory
CORRESPONDENT

Anyone who attended the second annual "Paint the Town Plein Air" sponsored by the Christopher Gallery off Route 3A last Saturday can attest to its success. Not only was it a splendid Saturday afternoon, sunny and warm with a gentle breeze, but a lovely day to recreate the town's activity — the ships in the harbor, the quaint side streets — on canvas. The event included about 20 artists from as close as Hingham and as far as Florida who gathered on the Harbor and in the village to capture in a painting their perception of life on this particular day.

"Plein Air" in French means "open air" and it describes the type of spontaneous location painting many attribute to Paris, with life exploding right before one's eyes on the sidewalk or in a café, or along the riverbanks. The artists who practice this technique get swept up in the moment and must work quickly before the light changes. What is perhaps most special about "Plein Air" painting is the spectator becomes involved with a "work in progress"— a rare treat in the world of art. As noted by the Christopher Gallery, "Once people are captivated by the immediacy and spontaneity of plein air work, they come to treasure the paintings as a reflection of the soul of the person who created them."

Though not Paris, Cohasset served as a beautiful backdrop for the artists to recreate the liberating feeling of uncensored self-expression. One brave artist, Robert Farris Jr., stood alone in front of his easel in the vil-

Preserving Cohasset Harbor's Bassing Beach

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It has been official since 1968, but the three new signs installed on Scituate's Bassing Beach this July 3 clearly delineate a large portion of that property as the possession of Cohasset Conservation Trust. The signs also request that visitors treat the area in such a way that will protect the land's natural beauty.

"Traditionally, people would go out to Bassing Beach and camp, have bonfires and what not and leave a lot of trash around," explained Bob Baggs, assistant Cohasset harbor master. "The Trust decided they weren't going to allow for that anymore, and they put up signs to that effect."

The 2.5 foot by 2.5 foot forest green signs are situated at the high ground on the west end of the beach, near the foot of the breakwater, and about 1,000 feet east of the breakwater. (The beach itself is located in Cohasset harbor, starting at Bailey's Creek which abuts one part of the marshland-connected "island", and is abutted on its other side by the outer harbor.)

"We hope that the signs will make a difference but it's awfully soon to tell, said John Hartshorne, president of the Cohasset Conservation Trust." "We wanted the signs to not be intrusive. In fact, they're rather hard to see but that's intentional. We didn't want the signs to stare people in the face but we did want them to be visible enough to get the message across. Their purpose is to encourage people to treat the land respectfully in the interest of themselves and others."

Baggs is pleased with the results so far. "There was no big mess left behind this year

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Beach permits on sale

Your beach permits expired May 31. Beach stickers are on sale at the town hall and have the following schedule: Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Permits now being issued will expire May 31, 1999.

Brush chipping slated

Residential brush will be accepted at the Recycling Transfer Facility Saturday, Aug. 8. No trees over 12" in diameter. No contractors allowed.

R.T.F. and beach permits

1998/99 R.T.F. and beach permits are no longer available for purchase at the R.T.F. Saturdays and Sundays. They can be purchased at the D.P.W. Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.; at Town Hall Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Thursday, 5 to 7 p.m.; and Friday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Anyone not having a current R.T.F. sticker will not be allowed entry.

Animal control number

Cohasset residents may reach the animal control officer, Kathleen Maguire, by calling 383-9119.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, July 28.

Public reading packet available

In an effort to promote communication, the school department provides a public reading packet and makes it available to local citizens.

The packet, which is available in the superintendent's office, contains recent correspondence and other documents. There is also an index of documents including items such as teacher contracts and school handbooks, so people will know how to access those.

Driver arraigned on MV charges

William Leigh Atherton, 18, of Clay Spring Road, was arraigned in Quincy District Court Tuesday on motor vehicle charges relating to the fatal June 9 car crash that claimed the life of his friend and Cohasset High School classmate.

Bourke Cocoran, 18, was killed when police said the 1995 Nissan 200 SX, Atherton was driving, careened out of control and crashed down an embankment on King Street.

Police said Atherton's car was traveling in excess of 70 mph when the accident occurred at about 11 p.m. that night.

Atherton is charged with motor vehicle homicide, speeding, failure to stay in marked lane and driving to endanger.

He sat quietly in the court room next to his parents. A single television camera was on hand and filmed Atherton when he stood with his attorney, Daniel O'Malley of Quincy, to hear the charges. Judge Charles Black presided. A plea of not guilty was entered on Atherton's behalf. A pre-trial conference is scheduled for 9 a.m., Sept. 1.

Motor vehicle homicide is a misdemeanor punishable by up to 2-1/2 years in prison. The Registry of Motor Vehicles indefinitely revoked Atherton's driver's license June 11. Before the June 9 accident, Atherton had had three speeding tickets and one written warning for speeding and had been involved in a single car accident last winter. His license was suspended in Aug. 1997 for having three moving violations within a year. It was reinstated in October.

Group provides network for business women

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

What do a book store owner, financial advisor and health care provider have in common?

A lot, according to Nancy Boyle of Hingham.

They are all small businesses run by women and therefore, not only share the problems and perks of "entrepreneurship" but are venturing in increasing numbers into what was formerly a "man's world."

The South Shore Women's Business Network has filled a void that Boyle, who is full-time director and a former president of the organization, knows all too well.

Her business, which started as a typing service run from her home and turned into a company with employees and overhead, didn't survive the recession in 1991.

"There was not support system, I didn't have a net around me. When the economy fell down, a lot didn't know where to turn," the Hingham resident recalled.

At about the same time, the SSWBN was born — the brainchild of a handful of women, including Boyle — who believed there was a need for an organization to provide networking opportunities for women doing business on the South Shore.

The organization has grown from a fledgling group of eight women in May of 1991 to more than 570 members today.

Through its educational forums, breakfast and luncheon meetings, golf tournaments, its annual Business Expo sponsored by BankBoston and more — the SSWBN is reaching out to the small business person (men are also welcome to join).

Members not only share enthusiasm and encourage one another but they also develop networking skills, and find resources and referrals, Boyle explained.

Practical help such as understanding how to access government contracts which have set asides for women and minority-owned businesses and employee law are examples of educational programs sponsored by SSWBN.

Boyle said large companies often provide that kind of assistance "in house" but that's not the case for the small business owner.

Susan Pett epitomizes the small business entrepreneur. She operates Woods Web, which does Web site consulting and systems development, from her Hingham home. She's a company of one.

> "Women are really nice to do business with, we know what we're doing, we're smart and that's a wonderful thing."
> Nancy Boyle, SSWBN director

Pett, who balances her work with the needs of two young children, joined SSWBN about 1-1/2 years ago.

"Obviously I like to get business from it," she said. "But it's also a nice way to talk to other people starting their own business. It's a nice way to have peers in a one-person company. It's the only way someone like me who works by themselves can get marketing and sales ideas and things like that."

Betsy Detwiler, who owns Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham, said SSWBN is very inclusive.

"They treat everyone the same," Detwiler said. "The people just getting started out of their house are treated with just as much respect as someone who is an executive at a bank."

She praised the monthly breakfast meetings in which a SSBWN facilitator sits at each table to make sure everyone gets acquainted and swaps business cards.

Cohasset's Dorothy Keville, president of Peace Meal Bread, said she made a good business connection through the SSWBN.

She hooked up with Cindy Rice, owner of International Brownie in Braintree.

"I was renting space at another bakery and it was too expensive," Keville recalled. "Cindy has the baking facility, so she is baking my bread for me.

"This is women helping women," Keville said.

Jodee Doyle of Cohasset, who is a sales rep for Dalton Spring Water, said the SSWBN membership directory is a great resource.

"I use it to find services, everything from financial to the Internet," she said.

At the organization's annual Expo in November, members can exhibit their products and services for the public. There will be an educational workshop at the Expo in which one can learn about sales and marketing through technology.

SSWBN also sponsors an annual golf tournament along with the Abington Savings Bank where the majority of participants are female.

"It's a business networking event," Boyle said. "Golf is a growing sport and it's a wonderful business tool."

Rockland Trust is a partner with SSBWN and eight company employees are members.

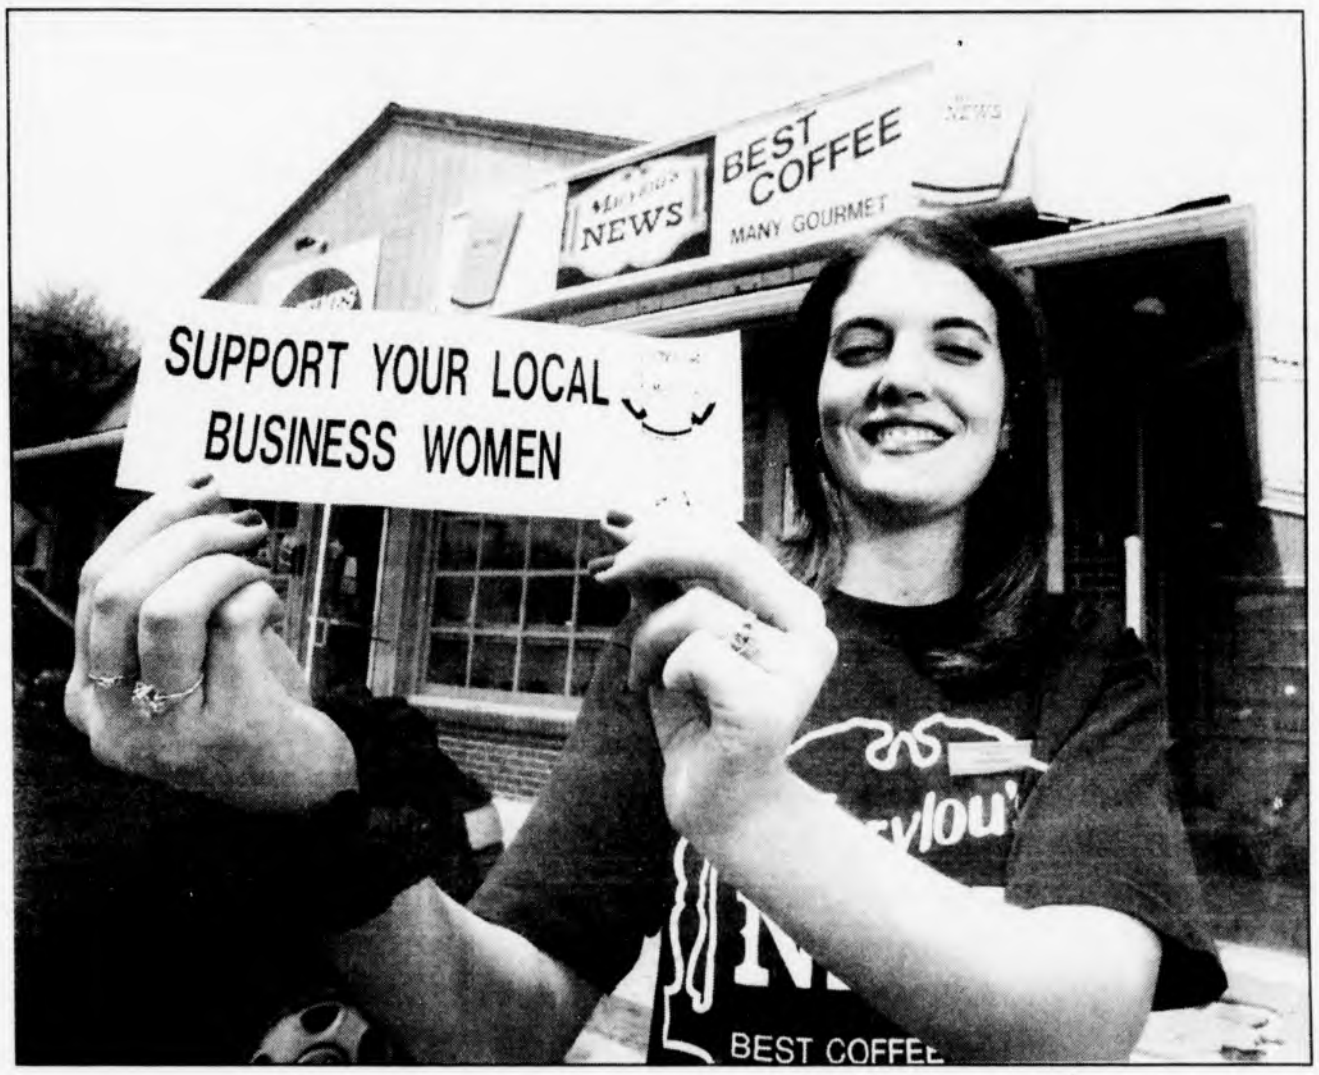
Boyle said local companies realize that women in business are an important economic force.

"Women are spending money as well as providing jobs and contributing to the growth of the economy," she said.

And that's not all.

"Women are really nice to do business with, we know what we're doing, we're smart and that's a wonderful thing," she said.

As SSWBN continues to grow, Boyle said a challenge is meeting the needs of its range of members. For example, those who have been in business five years have different issues than someone starting a company up.



"Our challenge is to look to the future and be there even before our members in terms of information," she said.

Moving members into the larger community of cyberspace and seeing Web sites linked to the SSWBN's so more information can be shared lies ahead.

Boyle would like to see the membership double in the next three years.

"Every time there's a new face in the room, there's a new resource for someone," she said. "And in this day and age, you can't have too many resources available."

For more information, the SSWBN can be reached by phone at 781-749-8883; e-mail at sswbn@dreamcom.net; or at its Website at sswbn.org.

The economic facts

- In the greater Boston area, women-owned businesses are growing faster than those in any other city in the United States. More than 1/3 of all Boston-area businesses are owned by women – an increase of almost 50 percent over five years. Those companies do $1.4 billion annually in gross revenues.

- Women make or influence more than 80 percent of all purchases, including durable goods, such as automobiles. Women are now buying hardware, financial services, technology and other traditionally male products in record numbers (more than 1 million chain saws last year).

- Women-owned businesses in the US employ 35 percent more people than are employed worldwide by all Fortune 500 companies.

- 7.7 million women-owned businesses employing 15.5 million workers are doing $1.4 trillion in sales.

Forum to pave way for a new sidewalk

order to solicit public opinion.

Ed and Barbara Hinckley, owners of Lilac Antiques, aren't happy with any "bump" — which is an area where the sidewalk becomes wider — in front of their shop. It would eliminate the ability to park temporarily near their front door to load and unload furniture and other items. They also worry that landscaping planned for the sidewalk would block or detract from the display windows which attract customers.

"We are the most impacted," Barbara Hinckley said. "Windows for a retail business are very important."

Neil Murphy, a local engineer from Cohasset, said the task force should put the breaks on any improvements until it comes up with a master plan.

"The problem comes when you design little pieces of the village," he said. "You should design it altogether so you don't have to go back and redesign to fit those pieces."

Task force member Jim Sandell, an architect, suggested they reexamine the circulation plan in the village so it is more pedestrian friendly by making Elm Street one-way.

But member Jackie Dormitzer said the village must be an easy place for people to access.

All agreed that the sidewalk area in front of St. Stephen's Church and the Teen Center was dangerous and needed improvement.

"I can't imagine any circumstance where we wouldn't want to do that," Sandell said.

They felt that area could be improved even if the sidewalk stopped just before it reached Lilac Antiques, with the idea that piece could be added later when a master plan is developed.

But Rizzo is concerned that a change in the scope of the project could jeopardize the grant which is based on making a dangerous intersection safer for pedestrians and traffic.

At next Thursday's forum, the task force also expects to hear concerns about removing some of the ledge below St. Stephen's in order to widen the sidewalk.

Task Force member Jim Shipsky, an architect, told the committee the ledge can be removed by "the heat and cold water method" and would not require blasting. This method would maintain a natural profile to the rock.

The proposed "bump out" on the sidewalk in the village in front of Lilac Antiques is on the agenda for the July 30 forum on village revitalization.

Deveney sisters are running the show

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

For 10 years, the sister team of Sarah, Beth and Grace Deveney has been producing theatrical performances in Cohasset. They are the driving force behind the Cohasset Recreation Department's drama program, which will perform "Anastasia," Aug. 11 and 12 at the Cohasset High School auditorium.

The now-twentysomething Deveneys' rise to community fame began in their younger years with "Pleasant Street Productions," which they operated out of their family's garage on Pleasant Street.

Beth, then 12 years old, directed her younger sister Grace who had the starring role in "Alice in Wonderland," and played the Mad Hatter herself while Sarah, the oldest, designed the scenery for the play. Family, friends and neighbors attended the debut performance of the Pleasant Street players.

The Deveney sisters, (from right) Sarah, Beth and Grace, have been the driving force behind the Cohasset Recreation Department's drama program since it began eight years ago.

The following year, the Deveneys took their act outside — after their father kicked them out of the garage — and performed "Peter Pan," using sheets and a clothesline to construct a makeshift curtain.

> "I could never do it without (my sisters). We all work together really well."
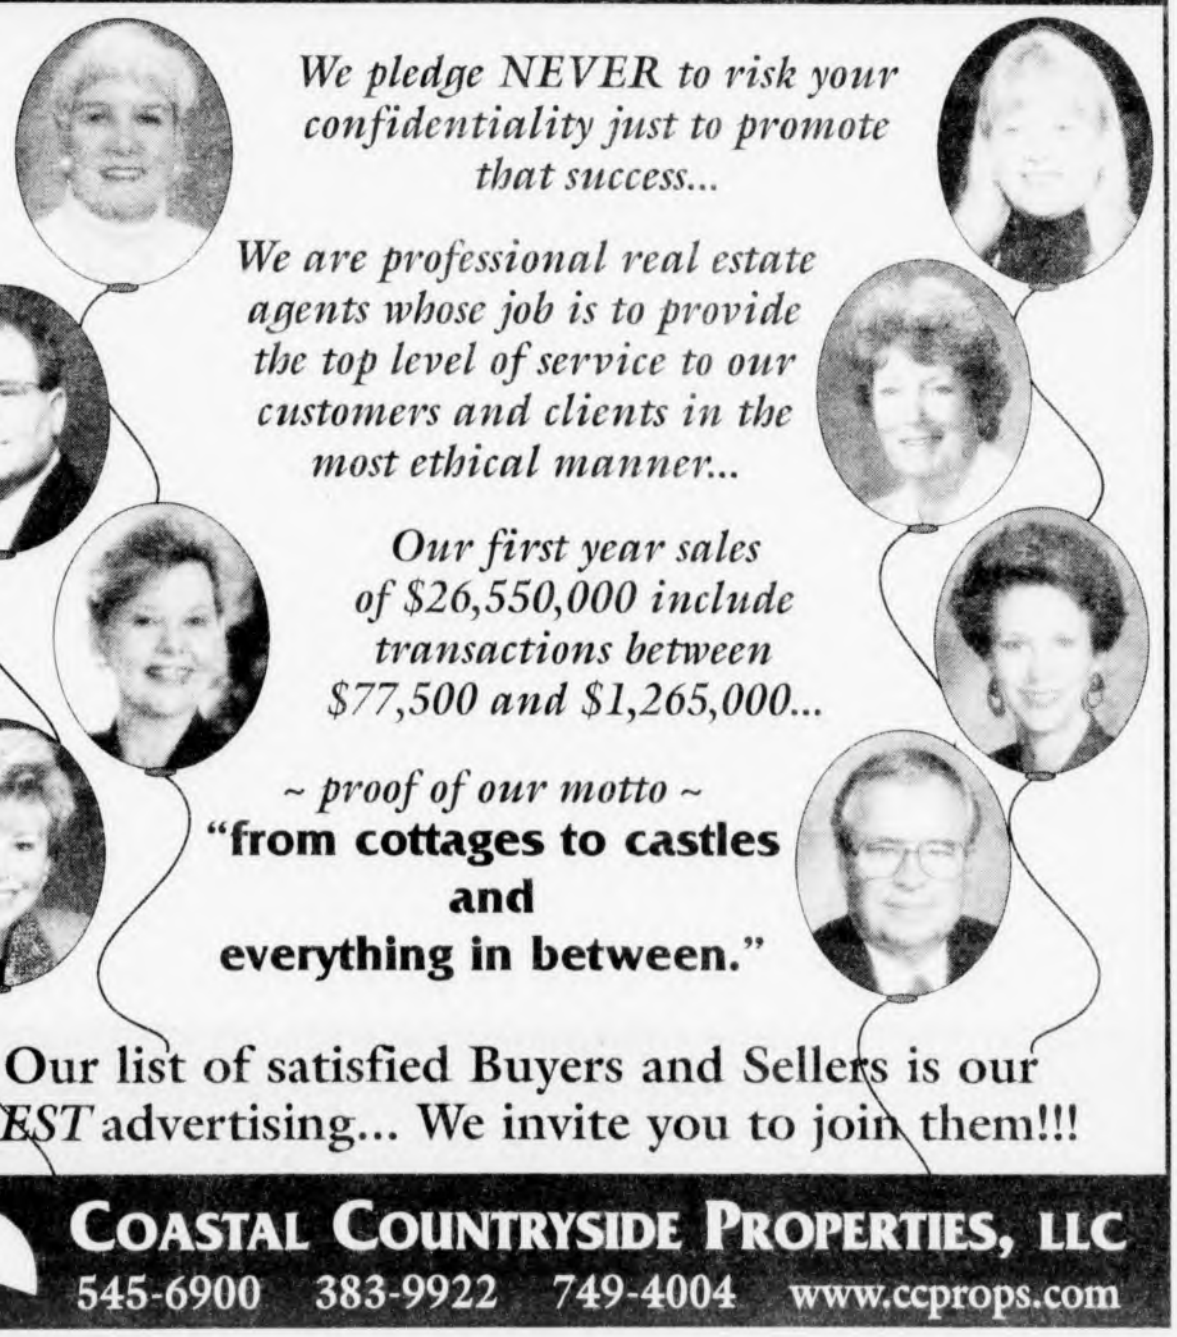
> — BETH DEVENEY, DIRECTOR OF COHASSET RECREATION DEPARTMENT'S DRAMA PROGRAM.

The productions were such a hit that their parents convinced them to go public. That summer, eight years ago, the Deveney sisters pitched an idea for a children's drama program to the Cohasset Recreation Department — which had no summer drama program at the time.

The Deveneys have been running the show ever since.



That first year, eight children between the ages of 5 and 13 registered for the program and performed "Cinderella" and the "Wizard of Oz." By 1993, when the troupe performed "The Little Mermaid," the program had grown to 50 young actors. This from the July 4th weekend. We used to have boat loads of debris that people would leave behind. Now it can be controlled—no big, open fires, uncontrolled camping or anything like that. People like to visit the beach for a getaway near the ocean. These changes will make it great for them," he said.

Preserving harbor's Bassing Beach

One factor that provided a boost for the signs' message was a federal grant for seven Cohasset police officers to be certified for boat patrol. The timing was such that the patrols were in gear for the July 4th weekend when the signs were first posted.

Bassing Beach is just one of 13 land holdings owned by the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization whose aim is to "preserve land while making it available for recreational use by the public," said Hartshorne.

The beach is bound in the Trust's history as it was one of the first grants of land donated to the group in the late 1960s and early 1970s by Parker Schofield, who had acquired large parts of the beach himself only a few years prior to passing it on.

Two dilapidated houses there—one of which had been a year-found residence for a family whose children used to row to Cohasset to attend school—were not knocked down thanks to the interest of John Muncey and fellow Bassing Beach campers.

Muncey had long been making the short trip to Bassing Beach in the summers before he proposed the idea of fixing the houses to the trustees. Muncey and his friends formed the Bassing Beach Tenants Association, working out a deal with the Trustees where the tenants were given funds to fix up and maintain the two buildings which could then be rented out through the warm weather months.

"We rebuilt the place," said Muncey proudly. Originally, the houses were available from mid-June through Labor Day but due to the popularity of the site—there are 35 people now on the waiting list—the cottages are now open from Memorial Day through the 20th of September.

Muncey used to camp on the Bassing Beach using only a 40' x 30' panel from the original Music Circus as a lean-to. "We were the only ones there then. A couple at the Marina used to joke and call us 'gypsies' because there were about 10 to 12 of us on any given weekend," laughed Muncey.

The Tenants Association has updated the cottage's plumbing, reshingled the exteriors, and put new roofs on. While most of their funding comes from the Trustees for the larger repair jobs, smaller fix-its such as broken glass panes and the like are done out of the renter's pocket.

Interesting historical notes about Bassing Beach:

- Bassing Beach's name derives from the popularity of the site for bass fishing.
- The 80 acres of salt marsh at the back of the beach was a source of contention at a 1630 meeting of delegates from the Mass Bay Colony in Boston and from Plymouth Colony, both vying for cattle grazing land. The outcome was a border between the two colonies that runs down the center of the Gulf River and continues on out Cohasset Harbor. That tidal stream is called the Four Score Creek, "four score" being common parlance in the 1600s for 80 acres.

Signs on Bassing Beach encourage beach-goers to help protect the area's fragile environment.

With so much work invested in the beach, it's no wonder that the debris left behind by visitors to the island last July 4 angered Muncey, so much so that he took pictures to show the damage to the Trustees. "Most people pick up after themselves," Muncey said, "but last year it was a stinking mess. I don't know who left what. Unless you're there to see them doing it, you don't know if it's just kids, but I found some dirty diapers in the junk left behind so it must be adults leaving the mess, too."

Such environmental damage is what the Conservation Trust is trying to prevent on all of their property holdings, such as pieces of shoreline (Scotts Shores at the juncture of Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue; half of Black Rock Beach) and marshland (a piece of Jacob's Meadow, reachable at the end of Sankey Road off Summer Street and another bit of marshland bordering the southwest of Lily Pond).

There is also an 18-acre stretch of the Great Brewster Woods in back of Cohasset's town hall. "That area provides a pleasant woodland walk in the heart of the village but remote from civilization," said Hartshorne.

Getting away from it all while remaining near the heart of the village is what Muncey counts as one of Bassing Beach's many merits. "You're not in the wilds of Canada. If your daughter suddenly gets sick, well, you can just get her to a doctor in about five minutes. All that, and you can still enjoy all that beautiful scenery."

'Anastasia' tickets to go on sale

Tickets go on sale for the Children's Drama Workshop production of "Anastasia" Monday, July 27, at the Cohasset Recreation Department, Town Hall.

Tickets are $5 in advance and $7 at the door. The production involves 92 children from Cohasset and surrounding towns. Performances are Tuesday, Aug. 11, at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and Wednesday, Aug. 12, at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Unusual shrub stolen from yard

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Margy Charles had patiently waited since May for a new shrub for her yard.

"With the rain, they were so backed up," the Linden Drive resident said.

The thread maple shrub, which was a gift, was purchased from Kennedy's Country Gardens which planted it last week.

Charles lovingly watered the shrub that night. When she got home the next day, it was gone.

"The hole was there but no plant," said Charles, who called the police.

Police encourage residents to report any thefts.

Chief Brian Noonan said in Cohasset there haven't been an awful lot of incidents of stolen plants on private property but public property is another matter.

"Larceny of plants from cemeteries is a problem," he said, explaining that around Memorial Day and the Christmas holidays the thefts increase.

Noonan said groups come in and hit a town, cleaning out a cemetery and then apparently sell the plants to greenhouses.

"I hope whoever it was delivered to will appreciate it."
MARGY CHARLES

"It's rather profitable," he said.

Noonan said it's hard to catch the thieves because they act so quickly.

Chris Kennedy, who manages the nursery at Kennedy's in Scituate, said Kennedy's is not immune to the problem.

This spring, nine Alberta spruces which were displayed in whiskey barrels at the store, were stolen.

He said it's easy to re-plant container plants because the roots are contained and that may make them attractive to thieves. He said Christmas trees and shrubs have also been stolen.

Kennedy said Charles' thread maple shrub is a "high end" shrub that one doesn't see everyday.

"It's kind of rare and unusual," he said.

Charles said Linden Drive was especially private that day with the road being torn up for the sewer work.

In her letter-to-the-editor this week, she warns other gardeners to beware of plant thefts while hoping her shrub has a bright future.

"I hope whoever it was delivered to will appreciate it," she said.

Summer band concert series

The next concert on the common is scheduled for Tuesday evening, Aug. 11, at 7:30 p.m.. The concert, which is sponsored by the Cohasset Recreation Department, is free and open to the public.

Performing will be the 30-piece South Shore Concert band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

SEPTIC TANK

Phil Junior was new to the workplace, but willing to tackle any job that I asked him to do. He was an excellent mechanic but overly anxious at times to learn the trade and to please the older mechanics. The first call one morning was to snake out a main drain down on Surfside Road. When we arrived, the septic tank was chock full, so I informed the homeowner that he would have to call the pumping truck and have the tank emptied before we could do anything about cleaning the main drain. We then left and returned later that afternoon. The tank was now empty but the drain pipe had not let loose. We tried in vain to snake the line from inside the house. We then decided to snake from the tank end. There was no way we could force the line around and up into the main out at the tank, so we were stumped again.

Phil said he was willing to climb down into the tank and work the snake from there. I asked him if he was sure he wanted to do this and he said, "No problem." We lowered a ladder down through the tank cover and tied a rope harness around the victim in case he ran into a problem while in HADES. The test dummy entered the tank. Immediately, he said, "No problemo," as he easily sent the snake up the pipe from that angle. The real problem developed when he shoved the snake in, because he unclogged the drain and three stories of human waste was let go. He frantically tried to make the ladder to escape, but it was in vain. He was completely covered with filth before we could get him out. He was fine, but I didn't think he should continue working that day because he smelled like HECK!

Yummy curried chicken salad

The hot weather has finally arrived, summer is here! People, however, are still hungry!! If you are a little tired of the cookout, the deli, or tuna, try this yummy curried chicken salad! It is lovely to look at and heaven to eat — a spiced chicken mixture with the traditional curry accompaniments.

Curry accompaniments:
Flaked coconut, canned French-fried onion rings, salted peanuts, currant jelly and tomato wedges. Or you may add one or all of these: chutney, raisins, chopped parsley, crisp bacon bits, chopped hard-cooked eggs, sweet or sour pickles, sliced avocados or grated orange peel.

CURRIED CHICKEN SALAD

7 cups cooked rice
1 cup raw cauliflowerets, cut in 1/4-inch slices
1 8-oz. bottle creamy style French dressing
1 cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon curry powder
1 tablespoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1/2 cup milk
7 cups cooked chicken, in large chunks (6 lbs. uncooked)
1 cup thin green pepper strips
2 cups celery, cut on angle
1 cup thinly sliced red onions
pineapple shells or romaine lettuce

Early in the day, toss rice with raw cauliflowerets and French dressing; cover and refrigerate at least 2 hours.

In large bowl, combine mayonnaise, curry powder, salt and pepper; slowly stir in milk; add chicken; toss. Cover; refrigerate at least 2 hours.

Just before serving: in large bowl, combine rice mix with chicken mixture, then add green pepper, celery and onions. Serve in pineapple shells or turn out into platter lined with romaine leaves. Makes 12 servings. Nice served with some or all of the curry accompaniments.

Take advantage of the park

What has 3,500 acres and is in our own backyard?

Wompatuck State Park.

Over the Fourth of July weekend, no less than 718 people set up tents in the camping area. That leads us to believe that many from afar seek out the park as a wonderful respite from the rigors of daily life.

But many of us here in Cohasset don't appreciate the park's rocky terrain, small fishing ponds, birds, meadows, shade trees and miles of hiking and bicycle trails. Wompatuck is so close that we take it for granted. Next time you're planning a camping trip to the Cape or New Hampshire, keep Wompatuck in mind. You don't need to go far to find a natural retreat.

"This land was made for you and me."
Woody Guthrie

"The park is special. It's a forest set in the middle of suburbia, and we're lucky this piece of property was saved for this purpose," says park supervisor Stephen Gammon. Take a walk or an early morning bike ride and you're bound to come across some wonderful wildlife. Woodchucks foraging or a group of deer enjoying a light breakfast of leaves and grass. The park is a sanctuary for animals and humans alike.

Visitors can pick up maps by the visitors' center near the entrance off Union Street in Hingham.

The park is open from 7:30 am to 8 p.m. for day use. The gates are open until 10 p.m. for campers to check in.

Already expansive, Wompatuck is going to grow. The Department of Housing and Urban Development approved Hingham's base reuse plan to incorporate the 125-acre Hingham Annex, which was used as an ammunition depot in World War II, into the state park once the dilapidated buildings are removed.

We encourage everyone to take advantage of "our" park. Show it off to visitors or enjoy a Sunday hike along its trails with your family.

You won't be disappointed and it might just be good for you and best of all, it's free!

As Mr. Gammon says, "Wompatuck is one of the larger state parks. It's a gem — a big one."

'A job well done'

TO THE EDITOR,

First I wish to commend the Cohasset Mariner's series "Windows into Cohasset" and the recent article written by Margo Sullivan on the Lightkeeper's house. The writer captured the rich history of the house and the outstanding esprit de corps of the residences of Cohasset who saved this important landmark that now enriches the community and provides an attractive function and meeting room for all the citizens.

Secondly, I wish to point out that the leader of the fund raising and the one who worked tirelessly and whom we all wanted to emulate was Joe McElroy. He energized all of us and our fund raising projects, but without his vision — and dedication, combined with his army of volunteers of which I was just one of many, we would not have been successful or reached the goals which have been so beneficial to the town of Cohasset.

All who participated in the Lightkeepers' beginning were proud of being a member of Joe McElroy's team and as the Navy says "A job well done."

A safer King Street sought

TO THE EDITOR:

For some time those of us who live on the 1-1/2 mile strip of King Street between Beechwood Street and Route 3A have been watching in dismay as traffic on this narrow winding road has grown because more and more cars are using it as a bypass to Route 3A. There are too many speeding cars and the accident rate has been prohibitive.

We have already had a tragic accident on this road . . . it is clear we need to act before we have another one!

A group of concerned homeowners who live on the road met July 13 at the home of Justine and Victor Vanderlugt and have formed a group, ASK! (A Safer King street) who seek to find and implement the right answers for safety on King Street.

ASK! is a citizens' group with no formal structure whose only objective is to calm the traffic on King Street by developing solutions to three basic problems: 1) Pedestrian/bicycle/horse safety, 2) Excessive speed, 3) Traffic volume.

A meeting of ASK! will be held Monday, July 27, at the home of Ed and Betsy Connelly, 1 Lily Pond Lane at 7:30 p.m. All interested residents are invited to participate and to bring their thoughts and suggestions.

Parking lot expansion

TO THE EDITOR:

As an abutter to Government Island, this is to advise of a hearing by the Cohasset Conservation Commission at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 6, on floor 2B in the Town Hall.

The hearing is in response to an application by the non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers' Corporation to expand the Edwin Young parking lot by an area 75 ft. by 75 ft. at the end remote from the ocean by removal of several trees, leveling the area and surfacing with crushed stone, and to remove scrub vegetation and dead trees from a portion of the slope between the other end of the parking lot and the ocean, and stabilize the slope with attractive plantings.

The Cohasset Lightkeepers' Corporation renovated the former lightkeepers' house into a community function facility (Bancroft Hall) under a long-term lease with the town. The facility is available at no charge to non-profit organizations; operating expenses and set-asides for capital improvements are recovered from fees charged for private functions and from rental of two small apartments on the second floor.

The cost of the improvements in the referenced application would be borne by Cohasset Lightkeepers' Corporation, with some incidental labor provided by the Cohasset DPW.

The principal use of the parking lot is parking by users of Bancroft Hall, but it is used also for boat trailers and tow vehicles and by other visitors to Government Island with town permits. It is desirable to expand the lot before next spring, in order to accommodate the expected displacement of vehicles from the Parker Avenue parking lot during renovation of the former Cohasset Colonials building. Expansion is desirable in any case because of parking overload from some of the more heavily attended functions at Bancroft Hall.

Local DAR is growing in numbers and spirit

By Susan Hagstrom
CORRESPONDENT

This Fourth of July, Americans all over the country will proudly display their patriotism. They'll wear red, white and blue, go to parades and salute the flag. There is a group of women who feel strongly enough about their country that they exhibit their patriotism year-round. Since merging in 1997, the Cohasset and Hingham chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) have been recognized for having the second largest increase in membership by application from January 1996 to January 1997. The group now has over 40 members and continues to grow and to find new ways to promote their motto of "God, Home and Country."

The DAR is a national, non-profit organization, which was founded October 11, 1890. It has approximately 190,000 members and lists historic preservation, promotion of education and patriotic endeavors amongst its objectives. The annual membership fee is $35.

According to DAR literature, women join, "To participate in efforts to preserve American heritage through education, to promote and assist in the celebration of commemorative patriotic and historical events, to preserve the memory and tradition of your own Revolutionary ancestors in a permanent genealogical record...and to join with others who cherish our priceless heritage so that we can more effectively protect our American way of life, defend our democratic form of government and promote the ideals of patriotism and love of country."

The Cohasset chapter, or Colonel Thomas Lothrop chapter, was founded in 1896 and the Hingham chapter, or Old Colony chapter was founded on Feb. 14, 1894. The recent merger seemed natural to many members, considering that Cohasset was once a precinct of Hingham. As a longtime resident of Hingham and DAR member for 15 years, Betty Cole said she can remember the times when being patriotic was really fashionable.

"It used to be quite a bit more of a social activity," Cole said. "My mother-in-law and her mother were both members and in their time the group even ran a three-ring circus! It was a very prominent club and being a member was really considered 'in.'"

According to Nancy O'Toole, the chapter's Regent, the group meets once a month on a Sunday, at the Minot Lightkeepers' residence on Governor's Island in Cohasset. Not too long ago, Sundays were chosen as the meeting time in order to attract younger members who are working during the week.

"There are a lot of people out there floating around who think that they could join but think it's an older group of women. That is changing," O'Toole said.

In order to be eligible for membership, a woman has to prove that she is descended from a man or a woman who served the American cause during the American Revolution. Helping a prospective member work on proving her lineage is a big part of being in the DAR.

"Sometimes it's easy and sometimes it takes quite a bit of research," said Barbara Dillon. Dillon has been the group's treasurer, is in charge of membership and is also somewhat of a genealogy expert. "After we get all of the paperwork filled out we send it off to Washington. Sometimes they need more information but if they feel it's complete, they will send us a certificate."

After weeks or months of preparation, it gets very exciting as the time draws near to send the information to Washington. Kate Colasanti of Weymouth has been working on her genealogy for close to two years. She said a cousin on her Mother's side had done a lot of research and now Colasanti is ready to prove that she is a descendant of Francis LeBaron. Coincidentally, LeBaron, born in 1668, was married to Mary Wilder of Hingham. Colasanti said she is thrilled to be completing her research.

"I think I've always been interested in listening to people tell stories about history," Colasanti said. "This group of women is a fabulous group and the patriotism goes back so far. I'm excited because I know that once I become an official member it will be easy for my daughter to become one. She'll just basically have to prove her relationship to me. It's neat to be a part of this group too, because everyone kind of feels related through their ancestors."

Betty Cole, left, of Hingham and Nancy O'Toole of Cohasset are members of the recently combined towns' chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR).

Both Colasanti and Cole said they enjoy the camaraderie of the group. Another common thread is the shared love of their country.

"Today, patriotism seems to be waning," O'Toole said. "This is our heritage. One of the focuses of the DAR is education and we hope that kids in school today are learning about our history and are proud of it."

The group helps to support the Hillside School for boys, supports other school programs, gives gifts to veterans during the holidays and also gives out annual Good Citizen Awards. This year, four local high school seniors were honored for academic and athletic achievements and contributions to the community. In April, pins were awarded to Alia S. Afshar of Cohasset, Wendy Ciovacco of Hinham, Stephen Muzrall of Rockland and Deborah Fleck of Hull.

In recognition of Independence Day, the some local DAR members will take part in a state-sponsored program called, "In Search of the Signers." On this patriotic pilgrimage members will visit the Church of the Presidents in Quincy, the Old Statehouse and continue on to the Old Granary Burying Ground.

O'Toole said she has her sights set on increasing the chapter's membership to 100 and they way things are going, she feels they can do it. To become a member, call O'Toole at 383-1547 or Dillon at 383-0025.

Little Harbor study to determine pollution sources

A newsletter created by volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

This fall, in cooperation with the State's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), a study will begin to determine sources of pollution in Little Harbor. It is a common misconception that Little Harbor has been cleaned up because of the DEP's Title 5 regulations. While Little Harbor showed some improvement after Title 5 took effect, the pollution of Little Harbor was slowed, but not stopped. In 1981, the clam flats were closed by the Division of Marine Fisheries (DMF), and in only one year of those in which measurements were made, 1989, have fecal coliform counts decreased below that necessary for shellfish harvesting.

Coliform standards for various water bodies as taken from the DEP water quality standards are shown in the table below. The measurements in Little Harbor by the DMF were only made up to 60 colonies per hundred milliliters. Standards for swimming are confusing since they vary from different bodies of water. Secondary contact standards cover boating and other non-immersion activities. Standards for boating, may exist in some local ordinances. Shellfishing requires a count lower than 14 except when shellfish are treated.

No one really knows what is causing the pollution in Little Harbor, but most experts blame the effluent from septic systems and the increased use of lawn fertilizers and pesticides in Little Harbor watershed. Also, pollution seems to be associated with increased construction activity and reduction of foliage cover.

Hopefully the Little Harbor study will give us some answers about the causes of pollution and their solution.

As we come closer to the time the Little Harbor study will begin, we'll provide some more details about what it will entail.

Which is best, septics or sewers?

As to which wastewater treatment is best, septic systems or sewers, modern innovative/advanced (so-called I/A) septic systems are more like sewer treatment plants than any other form of treatments since much of the technology is taken from such modern plants. More over, the effluent from a properly operating Title 5 septic system should be about the same as a properly operating treatment plant or I/A system with a coliform count below about 200, although other parameters may be higher. Under certain circumstances, older wastewater treatment systems can do the job. But under stress, such as in flooding conditions all systems undergo degraded performance.

This summer, we hope to have a brief workshop on wastewater treatment in which some of the tradeoffs will be discussed. The Workshop will be addressed by experts in sewers, wastewater treatment facilities and designers of on site systems who can give information about the most reliable economical expedients for waste-water treatment for the different situations they've encountered. They'll also give some hints on system maintenance.

The more we know about waste water treatment, the better equipped we'll be to make the right decisions about its control and treatment to provide the best environmental solutions at the lowest cost to taxpayers.

Thief takes new shrub

TO THE EDITOR:

This is a sad warning to gardeners. Be wary of theft in the daytime!

A thread maple shrub was a gift to me and planted by Kennedys Tuesday, July 14, in the afternoon. I had very carefully chosen its site so it could be seen from my kitchen. Of course, I watered it carefully that night and the next morning. At 5 p.m. the next day, my neighbor noticed that I must have changed the site because it was gone!

I did not return home until 8 p.m. and hastened out to water it. The hole was there but no plant.

All who have heard my sad tale are horrified; so if you have any suspicions of how such a thing could happen, do let me know. It was such a bold theft, I am disheartened.

I hope whoever it was delivered to will appreciate it.

Developer considering all options for Scituate Hill site

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Local attorney and developer Noel Collins believes the top of Scituate Hill on the Webb-Norfolk property has one of the nicest views in Cohasset. For this reason, Collins believes the 62-acre Webb-Norfolk property is one of the best locations in town for a residential development.

"My office is up here now and all I can see is ocean and trees without a hint of noise from Route 3A," Collins said. "This is a beautiful site. If it's developed residentially, people won't feel like they're living on the side of a hill; Scituate Hill is so expansive they'll feel like they're living on the top of a hill."

Collins is working on a plan with the owner of the property, Suzi and Sons, to build residential homes on the land. However, the land is zoned light residential and would require a zoning change for residential homes. Collins said he hopes to work with town officials to develop a zoning proposal creating multi-family dwelling district to include the Webb-Norfolk site.

At a recent zoning board meeting, former ZBA Chairman Mark DeGiacomo mentioned that he thought Collins was considering applying for a comprehensive permit to develop the site with affordable housing. Collins said all options are being considered, including a comprehensive permit, but the development team is still exploring all its options.

"This project is still in its infancy," Collins said.

Collins added that he had considered a comprehensive permit, but it definitely was not the preferred alternative.

"The comprehensive permit is a grand thing, but it has many drawbacks for developers," Collins said. "There is a 20 percent limit on profits and an awful lot of other restrictions. When interest rates go down, people express a lot of interest in comprehensive permits. That ends when rates jump and the stock market falls. I'd much rather see Cohasset develop its own multi-family dwelling district."

"This is a beautiful site. If it's developed residentially, people won't feel like they're living on the side of a hill; Scituate Hill is so expansive they'll feel like they're living on the top of a hill."
—Noel Collins, developer

A comprehensive permit is a controversial state development option that allows developers to bypass many local boards in exchange for dedicating 25 percent of the project to affordable housing. The comprehensive permit even allows developers to bypass some zoning regulations and build residential developments in industrial and commercial zones.

Developers who build projects using comprehensive permits appear only before the local zoning board. The local board can add conditions to the project, and even reject the entire proposal. However, if the project is rejected by the local zoning board, the developer can appeal to the state.

Sometimes referred to as anti-snob legislation, the comprehensive permit forces affluent towns like Cohasset or Wellesley to build affordable housing.

Robert Engler of Stockard, Engler and Brigham in Cambridge, is a partner in an affordable housing consulting firm. Last January, he represented a developer who is building a 112-unit residential development in Canton under the terms of the comprehensive permit. Twenty-five percent of the units will be set aside for affordable housing. Engler said the affordable units would be sold to families who earned 80 percent or less of the Boston-area median income.

The median income in Boston is $60,000, so the units would be available to families earning $48,000 or less. The affordable units would se' for around $80,000 to $90,000. The remaining units would be priced at market rates, currently about $190,000 for comparable townhouses.

A restriction would be placed on the deeds so the affordable units could not be re-sold at market rates. The restriction would ensure that the affordable units always remain affordable.

Comprehensive permits apply only in communities that have less than 10 percent of the total home stock devoted to affordable housing. According to state figures, only 2.8 percent of Cohasset's homes are classified as affordable.

DeGiacomo said he had seen only two applications for comprehensive permits in his 14 years on the zoning board. Neither project was built.

Collins said while he is considering options with the property owner to also look at an option for an industrial park, residential development remains the preferred option.

"This market favors residential development," Collins said. "It would be a shame to use for industrial purposes; I don't think Cohasset favors light industrial development. There are no residential sites nearby that would be affected; our largest abutter is the trustee of reservations."

In a related matter, a proposal to build a two-million gallon water tank on Scituate Hill has been on hold while the water commissioners have been dealing with more pressing matters. Collins offered a site for $1 on the back of Scituate Hill for a tank, but the water commissioners felt the cost of building on that site was too high. Collins is trying to help the town find a site for the tank other than the water commissioners preferred site on Bear Hill. Any development on Scituate Hill will require a large amount of water that could be provided by a new water tank.

Water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said Collins called him on Wednesday to re-start talks on a possible site on Scituate Hill at no cost to the town.

CSC Lobsterfest set for Aug. 8

The Cohasset Sailing Club is sponsoring its fourth annual "Lobsterfest" for members and their guests from 7 p.m. to midnight Saturday night, Aug. 8.

The menu will include chowder with oyster crackers, steamers with drawn butter, native corn on the cob, sweet grilled sausage, coleslaw, assorted rolls and chilled watermelon for dessert. The main attraction is choice of a 12-oz. sirloin steak or a 1-1/4 lb. select lobster — either meal cooked to perfection. A 7 p.m. arrival time is recommended in order to grab your table and get your dinner tickets. Dinner will be served promptly at 7:30 p.m.

The cost of the dinner is $30 per person and participants should bring their own beverages.

Landfill gases could pose a safety hazard, McNabb says

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill may be closed, but environmental and safety problems at the facility are far from resolved. The landfill must be capped, and there are reports compiled by environmental officials and the anti-landfill citizen's group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) detailing potential threats to wetlands and the Lily Pond watershed. But the most serious problem, according to members of SAFE and the health board, may be methane and other gases originating at the landfill and migrating off-site underground.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of SAFE, believes that methane emissions at the landfill are creating the potential for an explosion that could hurt someone. Explosions from landfill gas sounds unlikely, but the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has documented more than 40 explosions caused by methane from landfills. According to EPA, a 1969 explosion in Winston-Salem North Carolina that killed three people was caused by methane that had leaked from a landfill into the basement of an armory.

Reached by telephone, DHL owner Paul Barry declined to comment.

CHL is required to monitor methane and other organic gases originating at the landfill from the decomposition of refuse. Monitoring of the explosive gas at the facility indicates that the levels of methane currently are 1,300 percent higher than the Department of Environmental Protection's (DEP) standards for safety. DEP sets a "lower explosive level" (LEL) which it considers to be the maximum amount of gas that should be produced by refuse in an unlined, municipal landfill to protect the public from an explosion.

CHL is not a municipal landfill and it is lined. However, DEP requires action at municipal landfills when methane levels exceed 25 percent of the LEL. The latest reading at CHL taken last February shows methane levels more than 1,300 percent higher than the LEL.

Last month, the health board voted to hold site assignment hearings based on information from SAFE about environmental and legal violations. At that same meeting, health board Chairman Kevin Ulmer said he was troubled by the gas collecting underground. In a telephone interview on Tuesday, Ulmer explained some of his concerns about the methane.

"The problem is gas migration off-site," Ulmer said. "CHL has landfilled right up to the property line, while most landfills leave some kind of buffer zone. The main area is at the back of the landfill which borders the Webb-Norfolk property. I don't think there is an imminent hazard, but there is a proposal afoot to develop that parcel."

A local developer is hoping to build a large residential development on Scituate Hill, possibly within DEP's 1,000-foot range.

"So now there is talk of [health agent] Dr. Godzik going out to the Webb-Norfolk site and doing perk tests," McNabb said. "So if he drills a hole, hits a rock and creates a spark, there is the potential for him to set off a methane explosion."

McNabb said that much of the landfill is lined, causing the gas to migrate sideways through the soil. McNabb said the gas collects in permeable sections of the soil. Some of the gas dissipates in the atmosphere, some is eliminated microbially and some stays trapped.

"CHL has landfilled right up to the property line, while most landfills leave some kind of buffer zone. The main area is at the back of the landfill which borders the Webb-Norfolk property. I don't think there is an imminent hazard, but there is a proposal afoot to develop that parcel."

- Health board chairman Kevin Ulmer

According to EPA, methane from landfills can travel underground as much as 1,500 feet from a landfill and collect in basements. DEP's regulations state that there is a hazard if the methane emission exceeds 15 percent of the LEL and there are buildings within 1,000 feet of the facility. There are no homes that close to CHL, but there is a building on Scituate Hill and the Mass. Highway building.

McNabb said that CHL has indicated that the gas does not migrate more than 200 feet beyond the landfill. However, McNabb characterized CHL's estimate as nothing more than an "engineering guess."

Eliminating the potential threat of explosion posed by the gas is one of the items the town's CHL sub-committee is discussing with the owners of the landfill, Paul and John Barry. Now that the landfill is closed, the CHL sub-committee is working on a comprehensive agreement with the Barrys to resolve five outstanding lawsuits, several other legal matters and a host of environmental issues.

Ulmer said the methane will have to be vented in some way to reduce the threat of explosion, possibly by digging a large venting trench where the gas levels are highest. McNabb said CHL has received authorization from DEP to install vent pipes in the landfill to let some of the methane escape.

Another potential problem is the presence of large levels of hydrogen sulfide mixed in with the methane. Hydrogen sulfide creates the rotten egg smell that hovers over many landfills. Through much of its history, CHL has accepted mainly construction and demolition refuse. Gypsum board gives of hydrogen sulfide as it deteriorates, and may be contributing to the high levels of the bad-smelling substance at the landfill.

McNabb said once the threat of a methane explosion is eliminated, work can begin to make sure the landfill doesn't cause offensive odors in town.

"People have complained about odors from the landfill for years," McNabb said. "Don't forget, that material will be there forever."

There are many ways to eliminate the odors, McNabb said. Gas can be collected through pipes and forced through a filtering system or burned with methane at the top of a chimney.

McNabb said the methane gas will be one of the main topics at the health board's site assignment hearings, scheduled for Sept. 1. SAFE convinced the health board to hold the site assignment hearings to address alleged environmental and legal violations at the landfill.

"I'm glad the health board recognizes the seriousness of this [methane]," McNabb said.

lage, which was one of four spots designated for the tour. He had arrived a half hour early (11:30) and was prepared to stay late (the tour ended at four) if needed to finish a detailed village scene, but had to work somewhat by memory because the afternoon light had changed his scene. In contrast, guest artist Allan Banks of Tampa, Florida had one painting finished and framed and was sketching a base for another by 1:30.

Banks and his wife painted along Cohasset Harbor, as did most of this year's artists. From one end of the harbor to the other about 12 artists stood, all painting basically the same image. As a spectator, what was most striking to see was how each image varied from canvas to canvas. For example, whereas local artist Michael Graves' painted his sailboats using heavy, Van Gogh style strokes — a recent addition to the South Shore, Margaret McWethey portrayed a more realistic close-up image of the boats on her canvas. Both "visions" were beautiful to behold, and I envy the collector who walked home with either painting after the reception Saturday night, which showcased the works of the day.

Douglas Smith of Lime, Conn. paints the village.

John Kilroy of Hull sets up to paint "en plein air."

Part of the proceeds raised at the reception will be used to sponsor one lucky person to attend a workshop with one of the artists involved in "Paint the Town." Christopher Gallery, which is located in Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square, has created this "art scholarship" as another of the ways it supports art in the community.

Entries for Mail Art Show

The South Shore Art Center is announcing an open call for entries for their national show in the month of August, which will venture into the realm of "mail art," "Dog Days of Summer," July 31 to Sept. 13. Opening reception is held July 31, 6 to 8 p.m.

The guidelines are as follows:

1. Only mail delivered by the United States Postal Service will be accepted. (No faxes or e-mail, please)
2. No entry fee.
3. No works will be returned.
4. Documentation from the show will be sent to artists who provide a self-addressed stamped envelope for that purpose.
5. Reviews and selected pieces will be displayed on the SSAC website, www.ssac.org.
6. Only one piece of work per artist will be accepted.
7. Works will be displayed as they are received. No envelope or parcel will be opened unless stipulated by the artist in an explanatory note. Otherwise, the exterior of the piece will be construed to be the artwork.
8. Works displayed will be offered to the public in return for a small donation to the SSAC.
9. Entries should be received by July 27.

For a complete prospectus, call (781) 383-2787 or visit the SSAC website at www.ssac.org.

Cardinal Cushing School volunteer receives special award

Several hundred individuals attended the annual St. Coletta's of Massachusetts, Inc. Volunteer Appreciation Dinner in May.

Al Odermatt of Cohasset received a special recognition award for his efforts as a fund-raiser and a diligent supporter of the school. He has continued to be one of the driving forces behind the Annual Outdoor Mass that attracts people from all over for a single day of prayer, according to Paul Murphy, Vice President of External Affairs for the school.

"Al Odermatt is one of the first people I met when I came to work here in 1982. This special award is in gratitude for his many, many years of commitment to the Cardinal Cushing School," Murphy continued. "Al's work on behalf of the students resonates throughout this campus."

Odermatt has also donated to the school by volunteering at bingo, assisting at the annual Christmas bazaar, and providing support for mailings.

In fact, Odermatt met his wife Marian in 1972 at the first Outdoor Mass held at the school. He retired in 1974 from John Hancock Insurance where he was employed as an actuary since 1948. Odermatt also served as Director of the Cardinal Cushing Charity Fund for many years.

Deveney sisters are running the show

year, the cast of "Anastasia" had to be capped at 95, with more children on a waiting list.

"It's a really popular program, which is rather unusual for such a specialized thing, like drama," said Jack Worley, director of the Cohasset Recreation Department.

Worley said the drama program is the only one of the department's programs that is run by three sisters.

"The three of them together really put on a great show," he said. "They're really terrific."

Beth, 22, a recent graduate of Catholic University, directs the play and choreographs the show's four musical numbers. Her training in performance arts has inspired many of the plays' dance numbers over the years.

"It kind of comes to me. I take from what I've learned," she said, explaining that many of the moves undergo some sort of change once she sees how they look on stage.

Grace, 20, a junior at Boston College studying nursing, coaches the actors who have principal roles to make sure they have all their lines, motivations and movements correct.

"We've gotten so much more organized over the years and we know what we're doing," said Grace. "The kids are adorable. They really enjoy it and that's the most important part."

A graduate of Holy Cross working on her master's degree in psychology at the University of Massachusetts in Boston, Sarah, 24, still takes the time to play the same role in the production she has had since her early teens — set designer. The scenery — which is based largely on the movie — comes together during the last two weeks of rehearsals, she said.

"The three of them together really put on a great show."
— JACK WORLEY, DIRECTOR OF COHASSET RECREATION DEPARTMENT.

"It's really only hard the last two weeks. I'm up here late at night splashing paint around," Sarah said.

For all three sisters, working with each other for seven weeks of the summer gets a standing ovation.

"That's the best part," said Beth. "The both have great ideas. Well, first I say no to their ideas and then five minutes later I'm saying, 'I have an idea that'll work.' I could never do it without them. We all work together really well."

"We all have such different personalities that mesh really well. It works out well somehow," agreed Sarah.

At home, away from the 95 young thespians and the high school auditorium, the Deveney sisters still find themselves engaged in conversations about "Anastasia."

"We get into a play zone. It's all we talk about at home," Sarah said.

But discussing the play away from the stage often leads to improvements, Beth pointed out.

"We all see different aspects of the play and we give each other good feedback," she said.

Performances of "Anastasia," the story of a lost Russian princess's quest for her true identity, are scheduled for Aug. 11 at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. and Aug. 12 at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Cohasset High School auditorium. The drama club will put on a special sneak preview show for members of the Scituate Recreation Department on Aug. 6.

COHASSET SPORTS

Goooooaaaallllll!!!! Chris Gentile is one happy camper after scoring a goal Monday at the VIP Soccer Camp at Cohasset High School.

Is sports plate too full for pro soccer?

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

Sadly, yes. That's the only answer I can give to the question posed above to all of the soccer fanatics out there who are still wondering why the world's most popular sport is nowhere close to that level on these shores.

As I sit here writing this, across the world people are dancing in the streets and partying past the brink of dawn in Brazil while celebrating their World Cup win while most of the viewing public here is still struggling with the differences between a grapefruit and a properly executed banana kick.

Please don't get me wrong. I am a fan of the game. I played it in my youth and I tuned into more than my fair share of the World Cup games because they sure as heck beat those stupid X Games "contests" that ESPN and "The Deuce" have been showing seemingly on end for the past month.

But I digress.

What people need to realize is that soccer is not going to sweep across the Atlantic and take over the nation like the Beatles three decades past. Even with all the millions of people playing the game from youth leagues through high school, college and the semi-pro leagues, instant success is just not an option in this case.

Pro soccer right now is not unlike the seating arrangement you go through every Thanksgiving dinner: It's getting the turkey and cranberry sauce at the rickety folding card table while waiting for someone at the big table to give up their seat.

Translated, America isn't ready right now to accept professional soccer on the same level as the other major leagues because the average sports fan just doesn't have the time to be properly introduced to the game.

Instead, I'd put it in the same company as other fine sports options such as pro breach volleyball and auto racing. Popular? Yes, but not yet for the big dance.

Let's look at the cold hard facts. By the time the baseball season winds down each October both college and professional football have gotten rid of the cobwebs and are in the full swing of things. Then after the first of the year when they've wound down, it's time for hockey and pro hoops to take center stage.

And by the time that the March Madness of college basketball takes center stage, guess what? It's time to play baseball again. And don't forget about all those fans who spend their weekends sitting on the couch getting their golf fix.

There it is, the circle of sports life in America explained in less than 100 words.

I don't see professional soccer breaking into that chain unless, just like at Thanksgiving, someone at the big table checks out. Despite the present pro basketball lock-out and the way hockey may struggle with escalating salaries, a spot at the table doesn't look to be opening anytime in the near future.

Instead of lamenting about the fact that their sport may not be on the same level as the others, I say that soccer loyalists should celebrate how far they have come.

On the local level, you cannot bring up youth or scholastic sports on the South Shore without thinking of soccer excellence at all levels in a sport that has grown from a one-season diversion for people

A Bay State gold rush

Laugelle reigns as top dog on the mats

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

After the first weekend of competition in the Bay State Summer Games there has been a lot of precious medals headed south on Route 3 from Boston to Cohasset.

Andrew Collins, Matt Belson and Ken Leahy avenged a loss in last year's finals to take home gold in the mens' open lacrosse division..

Not to be outdone, Cohasset High lacrosse standout's Jacqueline Kahn and Caitlin Donovan helped their squad to the top step of the winners platform.

Taking a silver were Adam Leahy and Matt Verrochi for the scholastic lacrosse squad.

On the individual level, J.P. Laugelle defeated all that dared to cross his path on his way to winning the heavyweight division of the scholastic wrestling competition.

His CHS wrestling teammate Craig Sheerin took a second spot (112 lb) and Luke Caldwell took fourth place in the 189 lb. class.

Also competing this year were Carlie Carter, Caitlin Flint and Kristen Sheerin (gymnastics) and John Crowley-Buck (diving).

The Summer Games continued a string of good luck for Laugelle, who will be a senior at Cohasset High come September.

The grappler had a strong season for head coach Torin Sweeney on the mats for the Skippers and he continued that nice roll earlier this season when he came out on top in a Framingham invitational tourney.

Three straight wins at the Bay State Games put an exclamation point on Laugelle's recent run of success.

"I felt good going into the competition," said Laugelle, who also sees time on both sides of the line during the football season and takes part in the throwing events for CHS during the spring track season. "I'm in pretty good shape right now and I was ready to wrestle."

Laugelle attributes his recent success to a little blood, sweat and tears in the weight room and some intense training with the Orange Crush wrestling club in Hingham.

"All the work is helping me to become a much better wrestler than I've been in the

Ken Leahy helps lead S.E. lacrosse to victory

By David Wolcott

After falling in the title game last year to the West, the Southeastern mens' open lacrosse would have no part of a sequel this time around.

Cohasset High grad Ken Leahy led the way with two goals (nine total in the four-game tourney) to help his team to a thrilling 9-8 victory on Sunday in bringing home to gold for the Southeast team at the Bay State Games.

Leahy, 20, was joined on the team by fellow Cohasset natives Andrew Collins and Matt Belson.

"I t was good to get the win this time," said Leahy, who will be entering his junior year at Providence College come September. "We had a lot of players on the team from last year and we wanted to come out on top this time."

A standout soccer and lacrosse player at CHS, the 1996 graduate started the tourney off a little slowly with but a single goal in the opening game but responded with a pair of hat trick's in games two and three and then added two tallies in the gold medal contest.

After competing in his first Bay State's last year, Leahy said strong competition and old friends brought him back again this year for another try.

"It's a great way to keep in shape during the summer months," said Leahy, who besides helping out with the Cohasset youth lacrosse practices every Monday night also plays in a local college league at Babson once a week to keep his skills sharpened.

"I also like the fact that you get to play with a lot of guys you played against in high school," he added. "We had guys on the team from Marshfield, Hingham and Weymouth among other towns this year. It's fun to have a chance to play with them after going against them so many times."

The name Leahy has become synonymous with lacrosse around town.

The patriarch, David Sr., is president of the Cohasset Lacrosse boosters group.

David Jr., was a lacrosse standout at CHS and then at the University of New Hampshire.

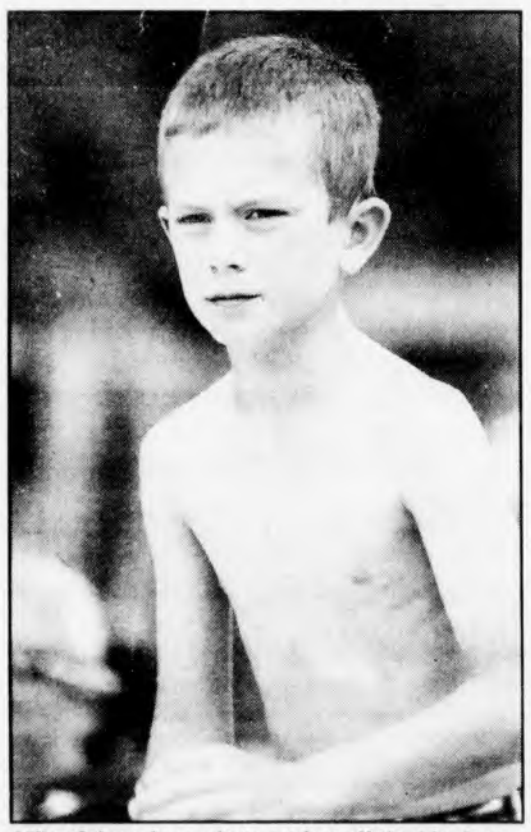
Cohasset swim team takes another against Scituate Harbor Yacht Club

By Jennifer Rafferty

Cohasset came through last Friday's swim meet against the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club with flying colors. Final score: 407 to 211. There were a few heated competitive moments like the 12 and under girls' medley relay, but overall Cohasset sailed through the meet.



What is the odyssey of a Cohasset swimmer? Several of the older swimmers reflected at the meet about how they got started swimming and what sustained their passion for summer competition. Chris Golden began swimming for Cohasset at the age of five. He remembered that swimming was always a "family event," so it brought everyone together. While Chris has started to swim for Cohasset High School in the winter, his brother Justin smiled and commented, "I'm just a summer swimmer." This raised one of the more interesting questions about whether to swim year round or wait until the summer months. Most of the swimmers stressed the importance of beginning in a healthy, fun environment. As they got older and entered junior and senior high, some started to swim in the winter months. Yet in the 12 and under and 10 and under groups, the trend is to swim more often year round since the competition is getting steeper with the larger swim team. Many younger swimmers now take lessons in addition to the swim team, while older swimmers relied on the daily practices for stroke correction. Greg Bilton spoke of the inspiration he received from former Cohasset swimmer John DeLima and Justin Golden recalled his sister Becky, John Jackson and Eric Karcher as inspiring mentors. Kate Grimm, Sarah Motley, Cara Foley, Carlie Carter, Ashley Ulmer, and Brooke Baker hit on some common themes for their motivation to compete: staying in shape, socializing with friends, racing without pressure, and getting to know the "little kids."

Chris Flynn gets the job done with the breaststroke in the 12-and-under medley race.

Swimmer's tips for this week are to work on carving some seconds off your start and finish. Come off the block quickly; practice your surface dive. Allison says to "use your legs off the block and streamline your kicking." To finish, race to the wall and reach out!

Make sure that you remember the end of the year banquet and dance for the swim team scheduled for Aug. 7 at the Cohasset High School cafeteria. The dinner and awards will be from 5 to 7:30 p.m., and the dance will follow until about 10 p.m. in the school gym. We look forward to having all parents participate in this big event. Save the date now.

Mike Grimm is ready to spring off the block as he awaits the starter's gun in a meet last week against the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club.

Here are the results from last Friday's meet against the Scituate Yacht Club:

Ken Leahy helps lead S.E. lacrosse to victory

hers Tom and Patrick, who was a co-captain on the lacrosse team this year.

As well, Ken was joined at the Bay State Games this year by his cousin Adam Leahy, who took home a silver medal in the scholastic lacrosse competition.

"I guess it all started with my brother David," said Ken. "I used to watch him play in various lacrosse tourneys and I became interested in the game Something about lacrosse really hit a nerve with me and I decided that this was something that I wanted to be a part of."

The choice has worked out well for Leahy who topped a fine freshman year of 44 points with a 35 goals, 17 assist effort for 52 points, avoiding any resemblance to a sophomore slump for the Friars, a Division 1 team that competes in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

His effort did not go unnoticed by his teammates who have elected him to serve as a tri-captain for the upcoming lacrosse season.

"It really is an honor. Something that I didn't expect to happen so fast," said Leahy, who captained the lacrosse team at CHS his senior year. "I'm not going to be a yeller and a screamer, but more of a leader by example. If I'm going to talk to someone I'd much rather do it one-on-one rather that in front of the whole group.

"The one thing that I'm going to stress is team effort," he added. "Nobody has to do it all. You can get much more accomplished when you are working together as a team."

One of his first jobs as captain will be to try and better the team's 6-9 record from last season under head coach Bill Pymm..

"We dropped a lot of games in overtime last year and things just didn't seem to go out way," said Leahy. "We also had a dozen freshmen on the team last year, many of whom played an important role on the team. This year they are going to be a year older and will have that much more experience under their belt.."

One of the incoming freshman that Leahy will be leading in the spring is his brother Patrick .

Thomas will head off to St. Joseph's College in Pennsylvania.

"It's a fun thing more than anything else," said Ken about sharing the field with his brother. "Whether it was with David or with the twins it seems that I've always been playing with one of my brothers. It makes everything that much more fun for me."

A Social Science major at P.C., Leahy said one of the biggest difference in the jump from high school to college is the intensity and time commitment needed to get everything done at the university level.

A member of the peer counseling group and the vice-president of his class for four years at CHS, Leahy said he just doesn't have the time to take part is similar projects at college.

"It's not that I wouldn't like to experience different clubs and groups, but I just don't really have the time to do it," said Leahy. "There's a big difference in the quality of commitment when you make the jump to college."

past," said the 230 lb. Laugelle of the two nights a week he spends during the summer with the Orange Crush. "I like working out with the club. It's intense and there is some great competition among the wrestlers."

It's that intensity that initially brought Laugelle onto the mats as an eighth grader, saying that he especially enjoyed the one-on-one nature of the sport.

Laugelle competed last year at the Games in the 215 lb. weight class without much success.

This year would be different as Laugelle got wins by pin over Rockland's Alan MacDonald (second period) and top seeded Paul Hurley in the third period before moving onto the finals and getting a solid 13-4 win in the gold medal round.

"It's a good experience for the athletes," said Laugelle of his time with the Bay State Games. "The competition is strong and it's a great way to round into shape for the upcoming season."

After the first weekend of competition the Metro team led the medal count with six gold and five bronze. Still left to be competed are boys and girls scholastic ice hockey, 7-on-7 soccer, 7-on-7 field hockey, track and field as well as archery.

who didn;t want to play football to something that the top booters work on all year long. Not only are the youth leagues and the high school programs bursting at the seems, but club soccer is now more popular than even.

As well, the Major League Soccer's New England Revolution have drawn reasonably well since their inception despite not having the best of success at winning games.

I compare the plight of the MLS to that of the two fledgling women's basketball leagues, the ABL and the WNBA, rather than failed experiments such as the United States Football League and World Hockey League.

All three of them have received some solid network television exposure and are in the process of adding to their fan base slowly, but surely. Soccer fans should be happy with that slow and steady growth while waiting for the chance to dine at the big table.

That chance may come or it may not, only time will tell. But they used to make fun of the American Football League, didn't they?

Hockey skills workshops in Hingham

Hockey Skills Development Workshops is offering a High Speed Skills program for Mites and Squirts. Skating Wednesday nights this summer for 8 weeks at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham.

The camp is directed by experienced College and High School coaches that truly believe Skill Development is a craft. All programs feature a positive learning environment, limited class sizes, and are focused towards skills actually used in playing the game.

Hockey skills competition

One On One Multimedia Productions is hosting a hockey skills competition Aug. 23, at the Bridgewater Ice Rink in Bridgewater.

This competition will be similar in format to the pros on TV, with all the glitz and glamour. The kids will have a lot of fun and be able to show off their stuff.

Dave Shea, announcer for the Boston Bruins, will be the master of ceremonies and there will be many celebrities, coaches, scouts, recruiters and other hockey VIPs on hand.

One On One Multimedia Productions specializes in Broadcast Quality Digital Video Productions to highlight your athlete or team, so there will be plenty of video to offer to the parents, hopefully at no charge.

This will be used as a fund-raising opportunity for the individual programs so they will be donating back to the organization in which that player participates.

Sponsorships are available for the program book, and again, an opportunity to raise more funds for the organizations by acquiring sponsors is tremendous.

All levels are invited including Town, Metro, NECDL and Junior.

Events will include fastest skater, best skater, best stickhandler, most accurate shot, best slapshot and best goalie.

Trophies for first, second, third places. Players will compete at their skill level.

Junior lacrosse program wishes for old equipment

The Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program is accepting donations of old sticks, gloves, helmets, arm pads and goaltending equipment, hoping to make life a bit easier for players and parents.

Currently, the team has no extra equipment to carry to games or lend to players. That has, in the past, meant that players who have forgotten some or all of their gear have wound up driving home — often from several towns away — or have been forced to sit out.

"We can't let a player on the field without proper equipment," says junior team coach Chuck Jaffe. "The best we can hope for is to share, which is tricky given how often kids come on and off the field."

The club is particularly interested in helmets, gloves, armpads and goaltending equipment. Jaffe noted that sticks are the one thing most players have when they start out in the game, "although we would accept stick donations too."

The youth program is hoping to secure enough equipment to help out players in its summer camp, so that children who are just testing out the sport won't go whole hog on gear, only to find out they would rather play something else.

"Lacrosse equipment isn't cheap," Jaffe says. "We're just hoping that people who have some of it lying around in their basement, or whose children have outgrown youth equipment, can help us move the game along and support the junior club and lacrosse booster program in the process."

To donate lacrosse equipment to the Cohasset Junior program, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

Get your kicks at the South Shore Soccer Camp

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 to 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's eighth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department; first floor, Town Hall, or call 383-4109. Brochures and registration forms are available at the recreation office.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both boys and girls during the week of Monday through Friday, Aug. 3 to 7, and Aug. 10 to 14.

Should a camper wish to attend both camps, this is now possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camps must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for the camp is $195 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore soccer camp represents topflight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players for the New England area.

Cohasset Men's Softball League

The hot temperatures took a toll on the players. Especially the Who's on First squad.

It was like they didn't show up! The Grinders claimed victory in game #1, and Last Call shut out the "Where's Who's on Firsts" in game #2.

Jay Fiori lit up his victory cigar after the heated battle and Mark St. John strutted off the field as the winning pitcher of game #1.

The Dog Pound howled after they trounced the Cell(ar) Boys. Bruce Maynard played in his 300th softball game and was awarded the game ball.

Standings
Dog Pound	4-1
Last Call	4-1
Grinders	2-2
Who's on First	2-3
Cell Boys	0-5

Cohasset Sailing Club weekly race results

Wasser Cup —

All junior sailors in the Captain & Sailing Master classes are eligible to compete in the Wasser Cup.

Crew:

1. Betsy Reynolds, Laura Genello, Rachel McElroy,
2. Elisa Ninde-Jerome, Rachel Doyle, Danielle Pinkus,
3. Martha Henderson, Courtney Anton and Kisten Creighton.

July 15

1. Betsy Reynolds, Laura Genello, Rachel McElroy,
2. Elisa Ninde-Jerome, Rachel Doyle, Danielle Pinkus,
3. Nate Wilcox and Owen McDonnell.

Season Standings

Betsy Reynolds is in First Place with 27 points. Elisa Ninde-Jerome is in Second Place with 39 points, and Martha Henderson is in Third with 53 points. The team of Nate Wilcox and Owen McDonnell is fourth with 72 points, but they are starting to give the leading teams some strong competition.

Stanton Series — Parent/Child Racing Series

All Club members are invited to compete in this "just-for-fun" family racing on Sundays at 5 p.m.

July 12

Race 1
1. Cunningham
2. Tristler/O'Connell
3. Reynolds

Race 2
1. Cunningham
2. Reynolds
3. Tristler/O'Connell

Race 3
1. Reynolds
2. Cunningham

July 19

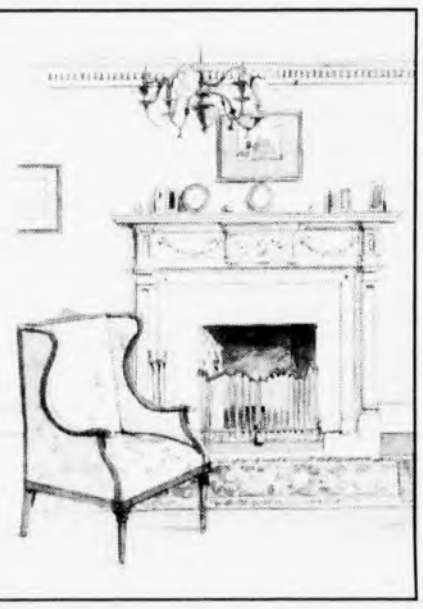
Four very close races were sailed in excellent conditions by 5 boats, our largest fleet of this year. The starts were very competitive, and the jibe mark was more that a little exciting with up to four boats rounding together. The results were:

First Place Ryan and Rich Ofsthun.

Second Place Bob Deutsch, Katie and Emily Larkin.

Third Place Cameron and Bob Cunningham

Hingham Bay Junior Regatta
July 23 and 24



Racing coach Amy Logue reports that five crews will race in the Turnabout Fleet this week in the Junior Regatta sponsored by the Hingham Yacht Club. Racing for CSC will be:

1. Phil Strazzulla and John Dewaal
2. Rachel Doyle and Elisa Jerome
3. Martha Henderson and Kristen Creighton
4. Julie Shea and Kelly Hurley
5. Betsey Reynolds and Mike Haajar

Racing in the 420 Fleet will be the veteran team of Robin Cunningham & Lane Forrer. Good luck to all the Cohasset sailors, and look for the race results in next week's Mariner.

Back attack! Or how to fight back

By Esther Csapo Rastegari, RN, EdM
CORRESPONDENT

What do the grocery cashier, the cello player, the writer and the surgeon have in common? They are all at risk of a back attack! Why? Their jobs require standing or sitting for prolonged periods of time. For the back to hold a certain position for a long time requires the back muscles to contract. Too much time spent in contraction leads to spasm. And spasm means pain.

What about you? Maybe you bent over to pick up a paper clip, or coughed or sneezed, and then couldn't move. The pain was paralyzing. And the fear of making the pain worse further immobilized you. Was the culprit the paper clip? No, it was the last straw — years of misuse, of no use.

Want to learn how to avoid the searing pain? Read on.

If you have suffered back pain, you are not alone. Before the age of 50, 80 percent of Americans will have had some back problem. It is one of the leading reasons for missed time from work. According to a University of Florida study, back injuries cost $10 to $14 billion in worker's compensation costs. Every year, 100 million work days are lost. (And these statistics don't include all those whose work is at home.) That's a lot of paper clips! It is one of the main reasons people visit their doctor. And what about all those people who suffer in silence? What is the problem? Is the back of faulty design?

The back isn't one piece of equipment. It is a complex interaction of bones, muscles, tendons, ligaments and nerves (and, of course, the gift wrap — the skin). And to top it off, it's connected to the head, the arms and the legs. Think of an orchestra. When all the instruments are playing the correct notes, the sound can be heavenly. But if one, or a few musicians are off key, the whole orchestra sounds off. If the musicians haven't practiced sufficiently or if the piece is of a difficulty beyond their present ability, the resulting sound can be horrendous. So it is with the back. When the muscles are strong, they can support the work of the back. If the muscles are weak, injury can result. Back pain can be acute (newly injured) or chronic (you've been suffering for more than three months).

The acute attack. An example of an acute attack is mentioned above — you bend over to pick up a paper clip, or a piece of paper, or a dirty sock, and you freeze. The pain is a 15 on a scale of 0 to 10. Panic sets in. You fear any movement, because it might mean increasing your pain. Somehow you grab onto a chair, or slump to the floor, and just stay there. Breathing hurts. If you are lucky, someone finds you in this rather undignified position, and helps. You may end up at the doctor's office or perhaps even the emergency room. While your wish is for a magic wand to instantaneously take the pain away, you probably leave with instructions to stay in bed and take medication to relieve the pain or relax the muscle spasms. How long do you rest? Studies have shown that two days of bed rest provide the same degree of relief as seven days. After a few days of limited mobility, however, muscle strength starts to decrease and a host of other problems crop up.

In other words, don't stay in bed more than a couple of days. And how should you lie in bed? Never on your stomach — that increases the curve in the lower back. If on your back, use one or two pillows under your knees. This allows the back to relax. Another good position is lying on your side, knees bent and with a pillow between them. Use another pillow to support your top arm. The pillow under your head should be small enough so that the spine is relatively straight when viewed from the side.

The key to getting better is a gradual increase of activity. While lying in bed you can start to stretch the back. Begin with what's called a pelvic tilt. Pull your abdomen towards your back, while curving your hips under — you should feel the lower back stretch and lengthen. Before getting out of bed, roll over to your side and push up with your arms while bringing your legs down to the floor. This puts you in a sitting position on your bed. From that position, stand up.

Before the age of 50, 80 percent of Americans will have had some back problem. It is one of the leading reasons for missed time from work.

For a few days, just walking around the house may be as much as you can tolerate. Of course, you want to follow your doctor's orders in terms of activity level. Not all recommend bed rest. Some emphasize movement to avoid muscles from stiffening. About 70 percent of acute attacks resolve in a few days to a few weeks. About 90 percent will resolve in three months. Resolve doesn't mean your back is strong. It just means the spasms have relaxed, and you are able to start to go about your business. If you don't institute a consistent plan to strengthen your back and the supporting structures, another attack is just around the corner.

The chronic back. The life of a chronic back pain sufferer is hard. First, there's the pain. There are no days that are pain free, but the level of pain fluctuates throughout the day. Constant pain is exhausting.

Life revolves around avoiding more pain. You can't sit through a movie, stand in a line, carry groceries or lift laundry. Doing the bare minimum takes forever, because you have to keep lying down to prevent the spasms from getting worse. Perhaps you are no longer at work or are on a limited schedule. You feel isolated socially and may have driven away friends because all you can talk about is your pain. You are depressed and discouraged because you have seen all different kinds of professionals, and the pain remains.

Well, there really is hope. Most chronic back pain can be overcome, but it will take a lot of work on your part. Look for a program that uses a multi-dimensional approach. Constant monitoring by qualified professionals is critical. The program should emphasize strengthening, flexibility and conditioning. All three components together create success. Many hospitals, especially rehabilitation ones, offer this approach. They can be very expensive, so know your insurance coverage. Worker's comp should cover it, but check first.

You can expect to be seen by physical therapists (PT), nurses and physiatrists, who are physicians with special training in this area. Expect to work hard. A program may last three months and require a commitment of several hours a week. Strength training will include lifting weights — yes, weights. You may start out with an empty laundry basket, but gradually the load will increase. Flexibility will mean stretching exercises. Conditioning will mean aerobic activity, such as walking, swimming or low-impact aerobics. Ask to visit the program. Those who guide you should be positive, warm and encouraging. Find a program where you feel comfortable. All this may sound impossible, but it really is possible. I've been there. I know the pain. I understand the fear. When I started, I was afraid to lift a load of laundry. By the time I left, I could lift 40 pounds. But more importantly, I lost the fear of movement, for it's the fear that truly cripples your life.

If insurance doesn't cover the program, they may cover PT visits. With a physical therapist, you can design a program to cover the three elements on your own. You can rent videos for stretching and aerobics. (The American Yoga Association's Beginner's Manual is excellent for flexibility exercises.

Divided into three levels of 10 weeks each, you can progress at your own pace.) Canned foods can replace weights. There is a way to do it. Find a buddy to keep you motivated.

Prevention and maintenance. The three-pronged program mentioned above is the key to preventing back problems. A sedentary lifestyle is a risk factor for back problems. It has been estimated that four out of five backaches are preventable. To have a strong back, one needs strong abdominal muscles, legs and arms. If these are weak, we overuse the back. This is why the weight training becomes important. To strengthen the upper thigh muscles (quadriceps/quads): Stand against a wall, with parallel feet about 24 inches from the wall. Slide your back down the wall as if to sit in an imaginary chair. Hold. In the beginning, a few seconds may be all you can handle. With time you can build up to a minute or more. Make sure you are not wearing just socks, to avoid your feet sliding out from under you. With practice, you may also find that the knee pain you had may disappear, as this exercise strengthens the muscles holding the knee in proper alignment.

In addition to a regular routine of stretching and strengthening, it is important to make the work and home environments back-friendly. At work: Think of your shoes. Do they offer enough cushioning? Do you wear heels that tighten the calf muscles, and alter proper alignment of the spine? If you do a lot of sitting, elevate your knees to be above your hips. Use a footstool or telephone books to help. Get up and walk around frequently. Have a chair that provides enough support to the lower back. Periodically bend forward as if to pick up something from the floor (while remaining seated) to stretch the back muscles. Instead of standing in one place, walk around, it places less stress on the muscles. If you have to stand, see if there is something six inches off the ground on which you can alternately rest one foot. While riding the elevator, lean against the wall instead of standing straight. Keeping the back muscles tense leads to spasm, frequently moving the muscles gives relief.

At home, make the bed by kneeling on it, not bending over it. When carrying groceries, request that the bags be packed light and of equal weight. Instead of one gallon of milk, buy two half gallons, so you can carry one in each hand. It's not several trips from the car to the kitchen that will harm your back, it's the weight. As you get stronger, you will be able to handle more weight. When washing dishes, open up the cabinet underneath and rest your foot on the shelf. Use an upright vacuum if possible; It requires less bending and less force. Carry the laundry basket close to your body, and to pick it up or put it down, bend your knees. When taking laundry out of the dryer, bend those knees — squat. Your legs should be doing the lifting, not your back. To relax the back, lie on the floor, resting your calves on a chair. Your hips and knees should form right angles.

Before an activity, run through it in your mind. Think about making your actions back-smart. Ask for assistance in carrying something heavy. If you are alone and have to move it, place it on a tablecloth and drag it. Like the musicians in the orchestra, don't ask your body to do something beyond its present ability, but strive towards it.

Warm up before-hand, prepare it with the tools of conditioning, flexibility and strength. Then you and your back can make beautiful music together.

Alumni and present CHS students meet in 'The Dining Room'

"And this is the dining room." With these words A.R. Gurney has a real estate agent open the play "The Dining Room," and with these words the Cohasset Drama Workshop opens its first student and alumni production July 24 and 25 at 8 p.m. in the Cohasset High School auditorium. Tickets for the play are only $5.

Appearing in multiple roles in "The Dining Room" are Margaret Barlow ('77), Grace Gardner ('00), Ali Kinchla ('98), Ron Nicynski ('99), Kevin O'Donnell ('95), Meredith O'Hayre ('99), Stewart Replogle ('77), Stephen Reynolds ('99), and Alli Ritts ('96). The production is directed by Ron Emmons. The author of "The Dining Room" is perhaps best known for his play "Love Letters," which was a success both in New York and Boston.

"The Dining Room" is set in the dining room of a typical well-to-do household, the place where the family assembled daily for breakfast and dinner and for any and all special occasions The action is comprised of a mosaic of interrelated scenes — some funny, some touching, some rueful — which, taken together, create an in-depth portrait of what Gurney calls a vanishing species: the upper-middle class WASP. The actors change roles, personalities and ages as they portray a wide variety of characters, from little boys to stern grandfathers, and from giggling teenage girls to Irish housemaids. Each vignette introduces a new set of people and events: a father lectures his son on grammar and politics; a girl returns home from boarding school to discover her mother's infidelity; a senile grandmother doesn't recognize her own sons at Thanksgiving dinner; a daughter, her marriage a shambles, pleads futilely to return home; etc. Dovetailing swiftly and smoothly, the varied scenes coalesce, ultimately, into a theatrical experience of exceptional range, compassionate humor and abundant humanity.

The intent of this summer theatre project is to give present students a chance to work with and learn from graduates who have gone on to work in theatre at both the college and professional level and to give alumni a chance to continue to grow by dealing with challenging roles. It is hoped that this production will be the start of an annual occurrence.

"I hope some alumni who catch this production will let me know that they are interested in continuing the project next summer," Emmons says. "I was lucky to have run into Margaret, Stewart, Alli and Kevin, but I know there are a lot of other alumni actors out there."

To accent the feeling of intimacy in "The Dining Room," this production will be staged with the audien[illegible]n all sides of the acting area and with no audience member more than 10 feet away from the performers. To enable this to be done, seating will be extremely limited with only 60 seats available for each performance. Doors will open at 7:30 p.m., and performances will begin promptly at 8 p.m.

LIBRARY CORNER

Boston at its best

Be sure to visit the library and see the current display of artwork called "Painters of Boston," with Ros Farbush. Rosalind Farbush, Cohasset resident, was educated at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, where she also taught drawing and painting for more than 30 years. Farbush has had dozens of solo exhibits and juried group exhibitions during her career and won many awards.

This is truly a colorful collection of several local artists who have painted many familiar scenes of Boston in a class conducted by Ros Farbush. The artists on display are; Elizabeth Burke, Joanne Chittick, Patricia McCarthy, Rod Peterson, Page Railsback and Mary Ann Wall. The exhibit will continue until the end of July.

Museum passes

Passes are available for Cohasset residents to the following museums: Museum of Fine Arts; Children's Museum; Computer Museum, John F. Kennedy Library and Museum; Aquarium (not available for July or August), the Museum of Science and the newest pass to the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. All of these are a gift from the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Other passes available for Plimoth Plantation and the USS Constitution are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin. Please give the library at least 24 hour notification before securing passes.

Summer hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library summer hours are Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Friday and Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; closed Wednesday and Sunday.

Book sale success

John Flanagan, Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library member and head of this year's annual book sale drive, reported a huge success of approximately $2,000 in sales from books sold from the library stacks. Proceeds from the sale will be used to fund various projects for the library throughout the year. Thanks to all the residents who supported the book sale and to the volunteers who helped set up and sold books.

New library director

Janet Husband has officially become the new director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library as of July 1. Mrs. Husband was formerly director at the Rockland Public Library in Rockland for the past 13 years, where she provided library service to a town of more than 16,000. Currently a Member-at-Large representative to Old Colony Network Executive Board, Husband also served as secretary to the Massachusetts Library Association from 1987-1989. Husband received her Masters in Library Science from Rutgers Graduate School of Library Science. She succeeds Richard Hayes who retired as director of Paul Pratt Library after 29 years of service.

Calling all book groups

We're looking for existing book groups who might like to share what they are reading this summer with the community. If you belong to a local book group and would like to swap reading ideas, call Catherine Davis at 383-2570.

The Lovely and Literate book group in Scituate is now reading "Behind the Scenes at the Museum," by British author Kate Atkinson. This is a very original and comical story about a young girl's life beginning at her conception and following her family experiences to maturity. This first novel by Atkinson won the 1995 Whitbread Book of the Year.

THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 98P1683E1

ESTATE OF PATRICIA BARLOW
LATE OF COHASSET IN THE COUNTY OF NORFOLK
NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above - captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that CHARLES F. BARLOW of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executor named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on August 25, 1998.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this thirteenth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-eight.

OBITUARIES

Drexel W. Gibson

Mr. Drexel W. Gibson, 85, died at his home in Naples, Fla., May 2. He was awarded the U.S. Medal of Freedom and the Vasco Nunez de Balboa in Panama for his WWII work in Panama where he served as liaison between the governor of the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama. He subsequently worked for the Displaced Persons in Hamburg, Germany and Austria. On his return to the U.S. he joined the Berlitz School of Languages and retired as vice president in Boston.

He leaves his wife of 50 years, Mary K. (Icaza) Gibson; daughter M. Kathryn Gibson of Spring Creek, Fla.; a son, Drexel B. Gibson of Victor, Idaho; and a granddaughter, Aura Sisson. He was a member of the Cohasset Central Cemetery, the Cohasset Historical Society and The Old Goats Club.

Interment was in Cohasset Central Cemetery.

Kirk S. Giffen

Kirk S. Giffen, 86, of Takoma Park, Md., formerly a 30-year resident of Cohasset, died June 24.

Mr. Giffen was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

He attended Suffolk Law School and was a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association for more than 50 years.

Mr. Giffin was a veteran of WW II, served 20 years in the Judge Advocates of the Army Reserve and retired as Lt. Colonel.

His wife of 52 years, Marjorie B., died in 1995.

Mr. Giffen leaves a son, R. Alec Giffen of Hollowell, Maine, two daughters, Laina Georgianne Clugston of Silver Spring, Md., and Marne G. Snyder of Rode Island; a brother, Herbert C. Giffen of Wareham and a sister, Inez G. Laffey of Reading; and seven grandchildren.

A memorial service was held July 1 at the First Parish Universalist Unitarian Church, 300 First Parish Rd., Scituate.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset, handled arrangements.

Contributions may be made to Unitarian Universalist Service Committee, 130 Prospect St., Cambridge, 02139.

Clarence J. Vater

Clarence J. Vater, 65, of Norwood, died suddenly of a heart attack Saturday, July 11, at the VA Medical Center, W. Roxbury.

Born in Boston May 27, 1933, he was the son of the late Clarence J. Vater and Annie (Ryan) Vater of West Roxbury.

He graduated from Boston Tech and then from Wentworth in 1958. He served with the United States Navy during the Korean conflict.

Mr. Vater founded Vater Percussion Inc. of Holbrook, a drumstick manufacturing company. Prior to that, he had been the owner of C. Vater Music Center of Norwood from 1971 to '78. He had worked for Honeywell for many years.

In 1988 he traveled to Washington and the White House, representing Massachusetts as the Small Business Person of the Year. He had been a member of the De Molay, Odd Fellows, a lifetime member of the D.A.V., and a member of the West Roxbury VA swim team.

He enjoyed boating and computers.

He and his wife Joan H. (Adams) married Sept. 12, 1953. Besides his wife and mother, he leaves two sons, Ronnie of Norwood and Alan of Cohasset; a sister, Dorothy Berry of Newton and two grandsons, Eric and Dante of Norwood.

A funeral service was held at the Grace Episcopal Church, 150 Chapel St., Norwood. The Rev. David G. Robinson Jr., rector, officiated. Interment was private.

The Gillooly Funeral Home, 126 Walpole St., Route 1A, Norwood, handled arrangements.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to CMT International, one Springbank Dr., St. Catharines, Ontario, Canada L2S 2K1.

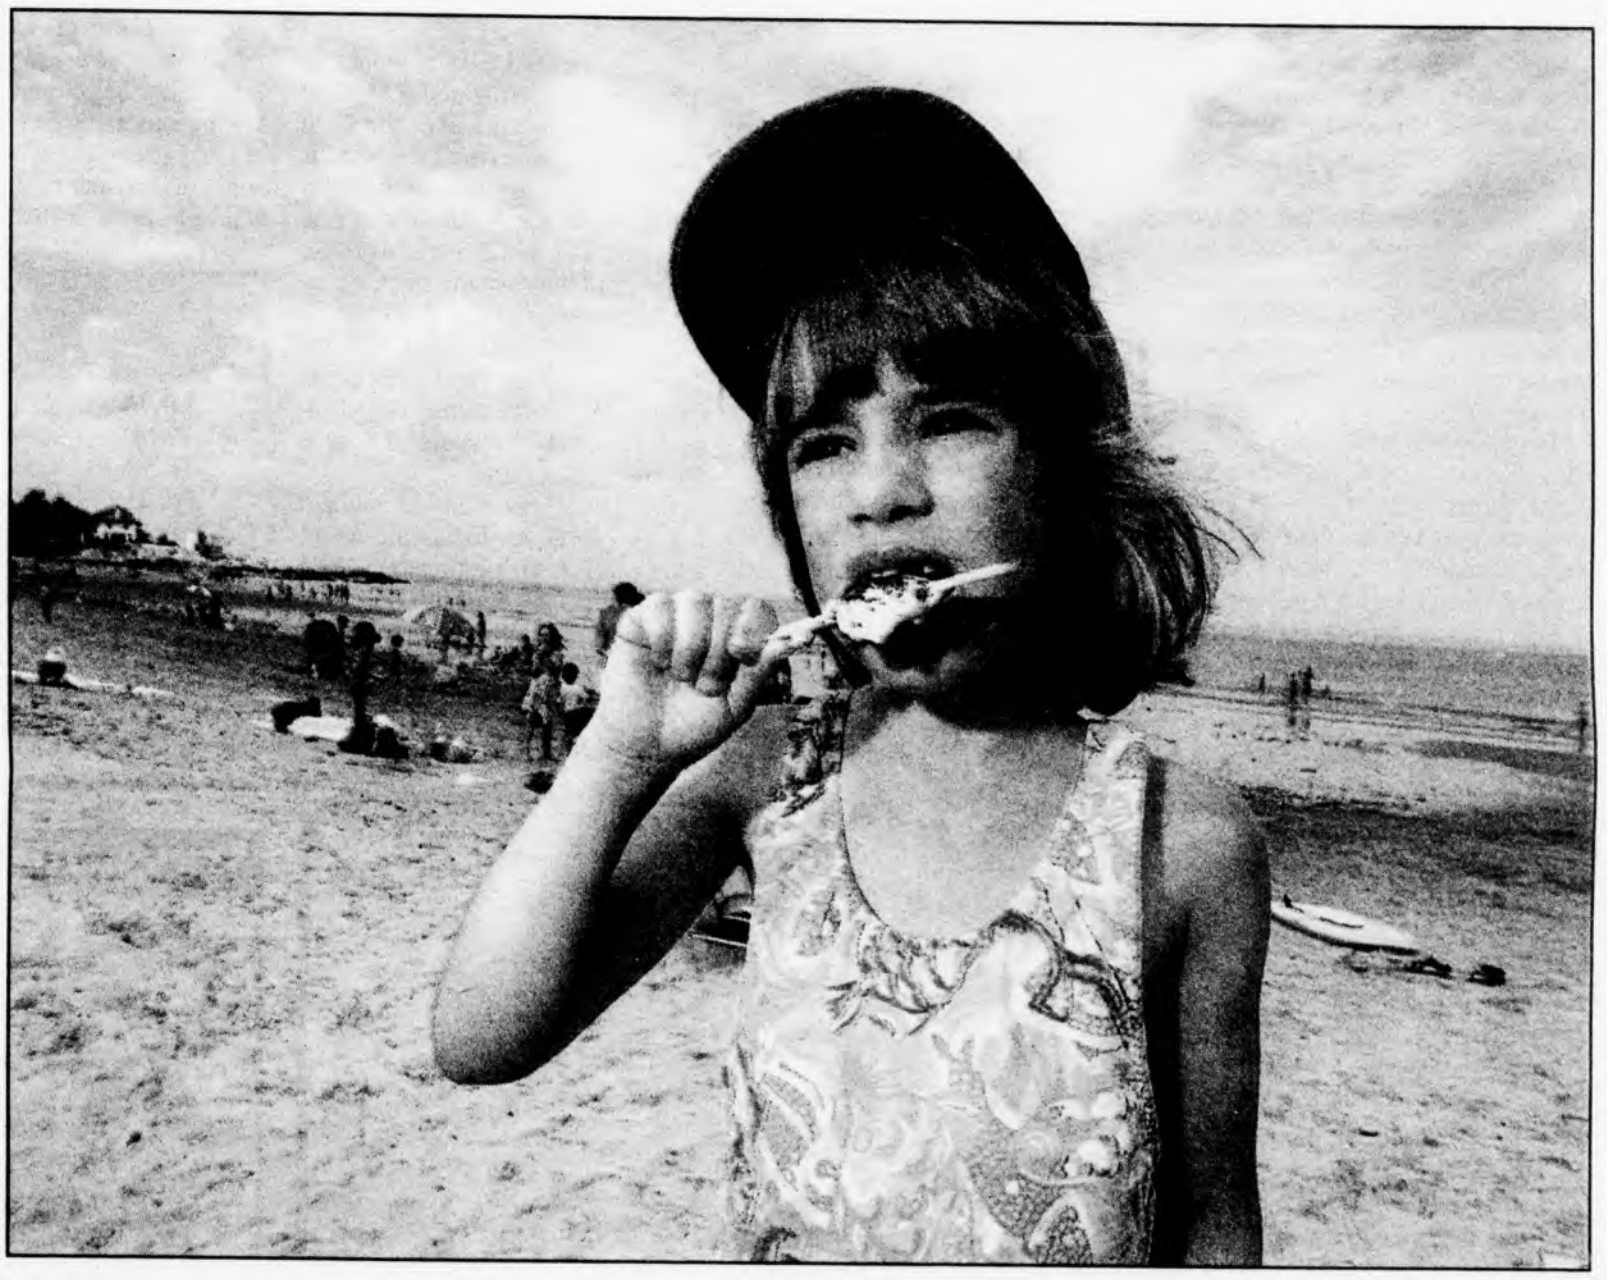
Red Lion owner buys Lilac House

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT



The prospects for the Red Lion Inn staging a successful comeback are looking better with each passing month despite numerous delays. The long-awaited demolition of the back portion of the building is expected to get underway sometime between Sept.1 and the end of the year. Owner Gerde Ordelheide appears determined to re-open the inn despite threats to leave town after a run-in with Cohasset Police on July 3 involving patrons drinking outside. Ordelheide has even obtained reluctant approval from the planning board to renovate the building using architecture that some board members found distasteful. The latest positive development came earlier this month when Gene and Marie Price sold a house next to the inn to Ordelheide for $600,000.

The house that Ordelheide bought sits next to the Red Lion Inn at 83-85 South Main Street. The Prices sold the house, which is assessed at $324,300, after owning it for 18 years. Built in 1789, Ordelheide said he plans to use the house as an extension of the Red Lion Inn.

"I was approached by the owner, and buying the house made a heck-of-a-lot of sense," Ordelheide said by telephone. "My intention is to put in a cafe/bistro and a retail

Vandalism in the village angers local merchants

New teen center may solve problem

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Business owners in Cohasset Village are usually happy to see crowds of people headed to their stores — but not when those people are four-foot-tall males with skateboards and bad attitudes.

For years, the area has been the vandalism target of a group of nomadic teenagers, who roam the area with nothing to do but cause needless damage to businesses, said children's book illustrator Donna Green, who has a studio in the village.

"I love children, but the ironic thing is that they're probably going to force me out of town," Green said.

When Green moved into her studio four years ago, she and her husband transformed the vacant lot behind her business into a garden with a brick patio that her husband hand-laid. That garden is now a shadow of its former self: young teens have trampled through the garden, uprooted flowers from their window boxes, strewn litter along the walkway and chipped away at the patio with rocks, she said. A bench that Green had placed in the garden disappeared along with a handmade ceramic bird cottage and rocks have been thrown at her windows, she added.

Green said she plans to take her original paintings out of the studio because she feels they are no longer safe there.

Her business neighbor across the street at Fleming's, Frank Smith, has had his awnings slit, his locks super-glued and his tires slashed in the parking lot behind his store. Other stores in the village have experienced similar problems — a fire at Tedeschi's, broken glass at the Texaco station and tables and chairs destroyed at French Memories, he added.

"They're bored and they're trying to fill their time," said Smith, who co-owns the store.

But relief may be in sight for both the teens and the businesses as soon as September, when a new teen center is set to open.

"The teen center could be the best thing

Liquor license approved for Ripley Road bistro

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Sheila and Bernard O'Neil have been given a green light to add liquor to their menu at their new bistro-style restaurant.

This week the town approved the request for an all-alcoholic common victualer's license for the hours of 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. It is anticipated that 20 percent of the business's gross sales will come from liquor business alone.

Ms. O'Neil had pointed out to the board while making her request, that most businesses that attempt to operate without a liquor license fold.

A stipulation that the board attached to the license is that certification must be provided for anyone working there within 90 days of employment; "certification" meaning that the workers must have completed TIPS, the board-approved liquor law training program.

Ms. O'Neil will serve as the restaurant's manager and will hold a 51 percent ownership of the business. Her husband, Bernard O'Neil, owns the other half. (As a Canadian citizen , Mr. O'Neil cannot legally hold the majority interest in the restaurant.)

An initial five-day week for the restaurant is expected for the opening of the establishment. "If we're successful," Ms. O'Neil explained, "we'd like to extend for two additional days. We'd also like to be open to lease for functions like luncheons."

"It will be great to have a nice restaurant here in Cohasset."
— Selectman Nan Roth

The bistro-style restaurant will open mid- to late-August at 107 Ripley Road where the old Log and Line had been. She said it will be similar to Hull's highly-praised Saporito's Florence Club Cafe, with a small, rather intimate atmosphere. The seating capacity should fit about 48 patrons.

It should come as no surprise that the O'Neil's eatery will resemble Saporito's, since Mr. O'Neil worked there as a cook and sous chef about four years ago.

"Bernie's a good cook," said Saporito's owner, Andrew Boothroyd.

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Clarifications are noted

In a front-page story last week about signs helping harbor access, the Cohasset Mariner reported that the Cohasset Sailing Club is public property. In fact, the sailing club is on town-owned land but the club's two wooden structures, gangway, boats, floats and motors are the property of the Cohasset Sailing Club, Inc. a non-profit organization, trustee Robert M. Davenport said.

The article quoted local architect Jim Shipsky who is designing ways to improve public access to the harbor, as suggesting signs saying the "Public is Welcome" at town-owned areas would be an inexpensive way to accomplish that objective.

A story about Bassing Beach may have been confusing about the border that now exists between Scituate and Cohasset. The Mariner reported that in 1630, the Plymouth and Mass. Bay colonies were vying for cattle grazing land and the outcome was a border that runs down the Gulf River into the harbor.

Davenport said while that was possibly the case in 1630, the border between Scituate and Cohasset goes along the center of the Gulf River to the area opposite Otis Avenue. The town line then goes overland parallel to Otis Avenue into Bailey's Creek where it runs through the center of Bailey's Creek to the harbor.

Library feasibility study

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have selected Stahl Associates Architects, Boston, to complete a feasibility study regarding use of the Joseph Osgood School as a new location for Cohasset's public library. Stahl Associates has extensive experience in designing public libraries which have received both Town Meeting approvals and state funding. Some of their recent successful designs include libraries in Medfield, Groton, Wrentham and North Andover.

For Cohasset, their study will include testing the trustees' conclusion that the current library building is inadequate for current and future needs. Stahl Associates will also determine the feasibility of using the Osgood building for Cohasset's library, and/or the feasibility of building a new library on the Osgood property. They will evaluate the Osgood site relative to other town-owned sites, and provide cost estimates for viable options.

Patience Towle, trustees' chairman, explained that this feasibility study will help determine the recommendations which the trustees will bring to Town Meeting in October.

Grant money for village

Dean Rizzo of the Village Task Force got the go ahead Tuesday from selectmen to apply for a $1 million state grant for infrastructure improvements in the village.

He explained the grant is designed to improve infrastructure such as sidewalks and streets when those improvements are tied to an economic development program.

Rizzo said the grant doesn't come with strings attached. For example, the grant wouldn't require the town to change the angled parking along South Main Street to parallel parking.

"We can dictate our own destiny," he said.

Rizzo estimated $100K would be spent on engineering and $900K on construction. What makes the town look good in the eyes of the state, is that it has already been awarded a $165K grant for a sidewalk at one end of South Main Street and private money will improve the sidewalk by the Red Lion Inn.

The money could be used to fund a "mini-master plan" for the rest of the village, said Rizzo, adding that ideally all the sidewalks would be done at the same time.

Also, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield was agreeable to dedicating about $50K of the town's estimated $360K in state highway funds to boost the project which also demonstrates the town's commitment.

"Spending $50,000 to get a million makes sense," Rizzo said.

In a related matter, a village forum is slated for 7:30 p.m. tonight at town hall to discuss the proposed St. Stephen's sidewalk improvement.

Marina expansion back on the table

Several selectmen met at 8 a.m. Saturday with the harbor committee to tour Bailey's Creek where Cohasset Harbor Marina off Parker Avenue would like to expand its operation.

Paul Trendowicz, owner of the marina, has revised his expansion plans which were rejected by selectmen last spring. Selectmen cited the following reasons in their decision: loss of town moorings, safety issues at the congested mouth of Bailey's Creek and objections from Parker Avenue neighbors concerned about increased parking and traffic.

Trendowicz will present his new plans to the harbor committee Aug. 6 and to selectmen Aug. 11, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

The plans will ask the town to move the federal anchorage line about 25 feet.

This would allow Trendowicz to lessen the impact on the inter-tidal area by reducing the inter-tidal area to be dredged by more than 50 percent.

Trendowicz, who wants to add 50 more slips to his boat docks, had asked that the federal line be moved about 40 feet after learning that his request to dredge the inter-tidal zone on the shore side of the marina as turned down by the state for environmental reasons.

Are You "Programming" Yourself For Good Health?

Like a computer, your body has to be programmed for best results. Rest, proper diet, sensible exercise and a good mental attitude are essential. Sometimes, even with all those, good health seems elusive. The difference could be a condition you haven't even noticed — a vertebra that has gotten out of position, perhaps from a fall long before. When that happens, the nerves that extend out from between the vertebrae aren't able to serve body organs as they should. Once the vertebra is restored to its rightful position, the body is given the opportunity to program natural health. A chiropractic checkup can be an important first step in programming health.

St. Stephen's 74th Carillon Recital Series:

Of carillonneurs, tubular bells and Elvis

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

For 74 summers now, Cohasset residents and visitors have spread out over the Common on Sunday evenings to enjoy the carillon recitals that ring out from the tower of Saint Stephen's Church.

This year, the recital series started June 28 and will run through August 30.

Individual carillonneurs, visiting from throughout the United States and as far away as Canberra, Australia, will each display their musical talent in an hour-long performance. The performers' programs contain music ranging in diversity from classical to New Age "Tubular Bells", from Spanish guitar to Elvis Presley.

Last, but not least, will be Sally Slade Warner, the church's official carillonneur. She is accepting music requests in advance of her August 30 performance.

Though a good night only draws about 100 listeners, there was a time that the area around the church was surrounded by carillon enthusiasts.

"There's an aerial photograph somewhere that shows thousands of people in attendance some time in the 1920s," said Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur.

The rise in popularity, Kennedy theorized, had to do with World War I veterans returning home with memories of carillons they had heard in Belgium and Holland.

"Suddenly, the carillon became sort of popular," said Kennedy.

So many people made the trek to hear St. Stephen's recitals that extra trains were put on line in Maine and New Hampshire, according to Kennedy. Traffic along the streets near the Common were also forbidden during the recital hour.

Kennedy is unabashedly proud of the 57-bell carillon, proclaiming it "one of the finest in the world, especially now that it was renovated and refurbished in the early 1990s."

It was in 1924 that Mrs. Jane Bancroft donated the 23-bell carillon to St. Stephen's Church in memory of her mother, Mrs. Jessie M. Barron. Over the years, donations have added on bells adding up to the current 57 which makes it the largest carillon in New England by number of bells. Yale University's 53-bell carillon is largest by weight.

The carillon bells hang in a fixed position, with their clappers resting an inch from the inside bell wall where they connect to the keyboard. The keyboard is located in an enclosed playing cabin in the tower, one level below the belfry.

So many people made the trek to hear St. Stephen's recitals that extra trains were put on line in Maine and New Hampshire. Traffic along the streets near the Common were also forbidden during the recital hour.

Much like an organ, the carillon's foot pedals duplicate the other manual keys, but are used to operate the largest of the bells. This leaves the carillonneur's hands free to play the middle and upper range keys. The softness or stridency with which the player hits the keyboard determines the bell's resonance.

According to both Warner and Kennedy, the best listening spot for the recital, despite tradition, is not the Common.

Kennedy recommends the Highland Avenue courtyard tucked in by the church where the bells are at their loudest. Free parking is also available here. Microphones can transmit enthusiastic applause or car horn-honking up to the playing cabin. "We appreciate the feedback," said Kennedy.

Warner thinks the courtyard area is too blaring and prefers the Stagecoach Way area (the pedestrian passage just across Main Street from the tower and next to Hunneman Realty). The tower openings should be in view in order to hear the carillon at its best.

But if you must go with tradition go the Common route, both Warner and Kennedy recommend that you keep away from the splashing sounds of the fountain and try to find a spot where trees aren't blocking the tower windows and the music coming from them.

After the hour-long performance is through, Warner waits for visitors who wish to tour the tower and perhaps try their hand at the carillon. Groups of 12 are invited to follow the carillonneur as she shows the way up the steep tower stairs to the playing cabin. "She wants everyone to get their chance so she just keeps taking groups up until everyone has had a chance to see the tower and cabin," said Kennedy.

Kennedy, who lives near the church, can hear the carillons from her home and considers herself lucky .

Those not as fortunate can content themselves with attending the oldest continuing carillon recital series in North America here at St. Stephen's.

"It's amazing how many people on the South Shore say to me, `I've been living here for years and I never knew about this.' But once they discover it, they're hooked. Where else can you find free parking, a good recital, and bring your own bologna or paté?"

Are one-day liquor licenses needed?

There was some confusion at this week's board meeting as to how it has come to pass that liquor is served at Cohasset Lightkeepers' Residence even though this public property does not have a license from the town board.

Town manager Mark Haddad indicated that a liquor license would be needed when renting out public property, even if the caterers were certified.

"We are not `serving' liquor," explained Murray Campbell the following day, in response to that question. "The caterers or bar service companies that serve liquor on our premises have a liquor license. They are all TIPS certified. We are the landlords and as such, we are covered as 'additional insured' by the caterer's liability company. Since we don't serve liquor ourselves, we've never applied for a license."

According to information Campbell said he received from Arthur Roebuck, owner of Arthur Roebuck Caterers and The British Relief in Hingham, a one-day license for liquor isn't necessary unless you're selling liquor by the drink. Efforts to reach Mr. Roebuck at The British Relief failed due to a busy signal at that number throughout the day.

"We don't have cash bars at our functions," said Campbell.. "Generally, our functions are hosted by somebody, like for a wedding or something. They pay for the food and the drinks. People just come and drink it up."

But a spokesman from the Massachusetts Alcohol Beverages Control Commission (ABCC) explained that "someone has to have a one-day license if liquor is being served on public property."

The selectmen's office said that so far as they know, no one has applied for a one-day license to serve liquor on the lightkeepers' property. Haddad is expected to pursue the issue.

About TIPS

The first TIPS program was developed in 1982 by Dr. Morris Chafetz, founding director of the National Institute on Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse . His aim was to give bartenders and waiters the skills and confidence needed to stop customers from becoming inebriated.

TIPS currently offers five versions of the TIPS program designed for commercial establishments.

The On Premise program is a six-hour session recommended for servers at restaurants, hotels, bars or any establishment where alcohol is consumed on site.

Certified employees walk away with learned strategies for serving alcohol responsibly, while still providing good customer service.

The TIPS program trains servers and sellers of alcohol to detect and prevent intoxication in their customers before it causes a problem.

TIPS workshops are conducted by TIPS certified trainers. The training sessions include an information period and an interactive class discussion covering topics such as the effects of alcohol; strategies to prevent customers from drinking too much; intervention techniques; preventing underage drinking and the legal and social responsibilities of servers of alcohol

Courts recognize TIPS as a standard server training program and insurance companies grant TIPS certified clients discounts of up to 25% off of liquor liability premiums.

The O'Neil's will be putting in $10,000 worth of redecorating in the dining area and bathroom, as well as in the kitchen. Construction work is anticipated to last two to three weeks prior to opening.

"It will be great to have a nice restaurant here in Cohasset," said board member Nancy Roth.

Trustees seek input from library patrons

The Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have released a consumer survey (please see this issue of the Mariner for survey insert) for Cohasset residents or for any patron of the library. Since there is a strong possibility that the library may have to relocate as a result of the laws of handicap accessibility, which require major space changes, the library trustees are seeking input from Cohasset residents and library users to help them make some difficult decisions.

Copies of the survey are also available at the circulation desk of the library, the community center, town hall, the Social Service League office, Buttonwood Books, the Hingham Library and several other locations around town.

Completed survey may be returned to Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 106 South Main St., Cohasset, 02025, or by fax to 383-1698.

King Street neighbors want a safer street

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A group of King Street neighbors is taking matters into their own hands.

Fed up with the speeding and high accident rate on what was once a quiet, bucolic street, they've banded together to try to reach a consensus on possible steps to be taken to make King Street safer.

About 25 concerned residents met at the home of Ed and Betsy Connolly Monday to grapple with solutions that range from cutting King Street off to all through traffic to installing stop signs and speed bumps.

"People are breaking up into committees to look at the options," Ed Connolly said.

Connolly said problems with traffic on King Street began about the time that the Super Stop & Shop was built more than a decade ago.

To avoid traffic and traffic lights on Route 3A, more cars are using the narrow, winding road as a cut-through. King Street runs almost parallel to 3A and has no stop signs, traffic lights or speed limit signs along its 1-1/4-mile length.

The neighbors, whose group is called ASK! (A Safer King Street), will meet again in August and hope to formulate a plan which may be presented to October's special town meeting to seek money for the proposed improvements.

"With 21 accidents in 24 months, something has to be done."
— Ed Connolly, 1 Lily Pond Lane

At the meeting, Safety Officer Richard Yocum said there have been 21 accidents on King Street in two years.

"With 21 accidents in 24 months, something has to be done," Connolly said.

Under consideration are the following options:

- Making a cul de sac at the Route 3A end of King Street and closing the Beechwood end off to traffic except for school buses, snow plows and emergency vehicles;
- Prohibiting right turns from Route 3A onto King Street between 5 and 9 p.m. and left turns from Beechwood from 6 to 9 a.m., installing speed bumps, speed limit signs and stop signs at Pond and Schofield;
- Installing stop signs, speed limit signs and a traffic circle at the intersection of Pond and King streets.

Connolly said the redesigned intersection at Beechwood and Route 3A may have exacerbated the problem. The widened intersection has become a speedway and some drivers can bypass it by taking King Street.

At their meeting Tuesday, selectmen heard a report from board member Tom Callahan on the ASK! meeting which he attended. Callahan questioned how the neighbors could get speed limit signs.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said speed limit signs cannot be installed without a posting order from the Massachusetts Highway Department.

Guard rails proposed in certain areas

Selectmen will determine where guard rails are needed around town. At their request, Town Manager Mark Haddad and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield came up with 13 specific locations at a total cost of about $46,000. The locations include five areas on North Main Street; three areas on King Street; and five areas along Jerusalem Road.

Haddad said aesthetics may be an issue.

"Guard rails aren't as pleasantly appealing but they are safer (than white posts)," he said.

Selectmen asked he send the report to the traffic committee for comment.

Parking at swim center a concern

Town Manager Mark Haddad is looking into ways to improve the parking area by the swim center at its access off N. Main Street. Selectmen are concerned that it is too congested especially during Little League games at the nearby Barnes Field. They are especially concerned about the possibility of drivers of sport utility vehicles not being able to see small children when they back up.

Haddad said he will report back to the board on the matter.

Local aid figures for Cohasset

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, announced that the Legislature has passed the Fiscal Year 1999 state budget. Contained within the FY '99 state budget are the official local aid figures for the town of Cohasset. The local aid figures are as follows:

School Aid (Chapter 70), $921,759; Additional Assistance, $209,013; Lottery Distribution, $346,166; a total of $1,476,938.

This year's local aid package to Cohasset represents an increase of $144,191 over the Fiscal Year 1998 numbers.

bakery on the first floor, and maybe extend some rooms upstairs." A business in the house, "Flowers by Joann", has moved to 39A South Main St.

Ordelheide also hopes to use some of the land for additional parking, expanded function facilities including a garden, a larger outdoor dining area and for better landscaping.

"I started an extensive landscaping project, but had to cut corners because of limited space," Ordelheide said. "Also, this gives me a better situation for functions so neighbors won't be bothered by music or noise."

Planning board Chairman Al Moore said Ordelheide might have to come before the planning board for changes at the new house depending on what he intends to do with the property. The house is located in a mixed-use zone, which gives Ordelheide some flexibility when planning uses for the property. Moore said he may not have to appear before the planning board if he uses the house as an extension of the existing business.

"For anything substantial, he would have to come before us," Moore said.

Moore added that he thought the plans to expand the existing structure combined with the purchase of the new house would make for an excellent combination.

"In concept, it would be awesome," Moore said about a bistro/cafe at the "Lilac House."

Meanwhile, plans to renovate the existing structure are still in the planning stages. Ordelheide said he has selected a contractor and hopes to sign a contract by the end of this week. If all goes according to plan, the contractor will submit final plans to Ordelheide in three or four weeks so work can begin on Sept. 1.

Red Lion Inn manager Joe Dooley said it looks like Ordelheide plans to use Callahan-Hoffman of Hanover to do the work. Dooley said the renovation plans require the contractor to demolish the rear two-thirds of the building, leaving the historic front intact as well as the dining room and most of the bar.

"It's taking a lot longer than Gerry (Ordelheide) would like, or myself or the town for that matter," Dooley said. "But when it's done, it will be a fantastic, elegant country inn. We're looking at a ballpark reopening date of April 1, 1999. We're trying to be realistic."

A visit from Tom Jones

Where does Tom Jones go in Cohasset to quench his thirst after performing at the South Shore Music Circus? The Red Lion Inn, of course. Jones stopped in to the Red Lion Inn on Tuesday, July 14 Sept. 1 for a few pints with the locals according to a letter from manager Joe Dooley.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerde Ordelheide was in the bar when Jones stopped by. Ordelheide didn't know at first who Jones was, but knew something was afoot when most of the women in the bar started whispering and pointing at the singer.

"He stayed for a while and had a few beers," Ordelheide said. "He's a very nice man."

Dooley said Jones was looking for something to do while he was in town for a show at the Music Circus. Someone suggested whale watching, or golfing, but Jones apparently wanted to sample a local pub.

"He said 'Cohasset is one of the most beautiful towns I've ever seen in my travels' and said it reminded him of Wales," Dooley said.

Later, a few members of Jones' band came in looking for something to eat. There was no food at the inn, so Dooley called Victoria's Pizza for a delivery. Dooley said Victoria's manager Matt Kuhn had shut off the ovens, but when he heard Tom Jones and his band were present and hungry, he promised to fire up the oven and deliver a pizza. Dooley said Kuhn delivered the pizza himself in a most unique manner. According to Dooley, Kuhn entered the inn with the pizza over his head singing, "It's a pizza; whoa, whoa, whoa, it's a pizza," to the tune of Jones' song, "She's a Lady."

"He was singing really loud and it was just a great time," Dooley said. "I'm still waiting to get my pictures back."

Vandalism in the village angers local merchants

that's happened in years," said Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Noonan said officers have tried to control vandalism by teens with bike patrols and cruisers as well as a pair of seasonal officers on walking beats in the village. But the police also have to cover the beach and the bridges in town, he said.

A group of student volunteers are working in conjunction with the town's recreation department to renovate the former DPW garage behind the Red Lion Inn and transform the building into a haven for teenagers. Plans for the 68x40-foot structure include a dance hall with a platform for deejays and bands as well as a snack bar and a lounge with a seating area and a television set.

"We were looking for safe activities for the kids that are substance-free," said Cohasset High School senior Tony Bramblett, one of the organizers of the project. "We asked the kids what they wanted at the center and they said they wanted a place to hang out, to have dances and watch movies with their friends."

The center, which is aptly named "The Garage," will be supervised by Cohasset native Jennifer Lagrotteria, 27.

"It'll be great once we open it," she said. "I wish I had an opportunity like this when I grew up here. There's so little to do. This is a fabulous idea. It's a safe environment where the kids can be guided and they can grow."

The key to the proposed teen center will be supervision — Noonan suggested Lagrotteria apply for the job — and parental involvement, Noonan said. Parents need to make sure their children are actually going to the center, he said.

"You can't just drop the kids off and forget about them," Noonan said.

"The Garage" will replace the current teen center – called Independence Hall. Bramblett said Independence Hall, which has been up and running for about three years, is too small, run down and badly located on South Main Street.

"(The new center) will have room for activities and everyone can be right here," said Bramblett.

In the past, parents would drop their kids off in the middle of the square instead of delivering them to the current teen center, Noonan said.

"The new center can help tremendously or it can be an addition to an already bad problem," he said. "If it's not controlled, there could be a real mess down there."

Bramblett and Lagrotteria are planning to keep teens busy at the center with occasional speakers and visiting artists — whoever the kids want to invite, they said.

"The kids have all kinds of ideas," Bramblett said.

One idea and a future project in the works is a skate board park, he said. But for now, the group's main focus is on the teen center, he added.

"This is the mother ship," Bramblett said. "We're starting here and then we'll plan for the future. Once this place is set up, we'll have an arm in the community and from there we can launch other projects."

Lagrotteria predicts that the new teen center will be an overwhelming success.

"It's going to be phenomenal because the kids are so behind it. There's no way it won't be successful. It'll be their castle," she said.

"The Garage" project has received numerous donations of labor and materials from local contractors, Bramblett said. Cohasset native Jay Flanagan, who owns Amex in South Boston, offered to power wash the entire building. Services have also been donated by Hancock Paint in Cohasset, Varasso Plumbing in Braintree and Cohasset Plumbing and Heating.

So far, the estimated $15,000 project is all fundraiser-driven, Bramblett said.

Organizers are holding a teen dance Friday night at town hall from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and a garage sale at "The Garage" Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

STAR TURNS

Testimony of the effectiveness of chiropractic in treating sports injuries continues to come from professional athletes. One such testimonial comes from Robert Parish, all-star center for the champion Boston Celtics of the 1980s. Upon having his number retired, Parish publicly thanked his chiropractor for prolonging his career, which lasted longer than any other NBA player's. A second testimonial comes from Martina Navratilova, who was hit by a tennis ball near her left eye in a match in 1992. Soon thereafter, her left elbow began to hurt to the point where she could barely serve by the end of the tennis season. After chiropractic care, which only involved cervical adjustments during a single session, her elbow pain left and never returned.

Professional chiropractic health care can be beneficial for people in all walks of life. Instead of covering up your symptoms with drugs, at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we look to correct the underlying problem. For gentle and safe chiropractic care, please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We treat the cause of the problem, not just the symptoms. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we're currently accepting new patients. Don't suffer with pain – let chiropractic help you. I offer presentations on such important topics as "Raising a Healthy Drug-Free Family," "Back Safety in the Workplace," "Stress Reduction," and "Meeting the HealthCare Crisis Head-on." AROUND TOWN

'BROADWAY TONIGHT'

The Saint Joseph Villa Retreat Center is holding its third fund-raiser Saturday evening, Aug. 8 — it will be held in conjunction with the South Shore Music Circus; they have reserved tickets for "Broadway Tonight," music from the musicals that America loves, featuring Anna Maria Alberghetti and John Raitt. It will be held Aug. 8; in addition to this performance the Sisters will once again include an oceanside supper at the Retreat Center before the performance (limited to the first 50 respondents) and a raffle to be drawn Sunday, Aug. 9. The proceeds from this gala will go to the staff, utilities and maintenance of the facility — the Villa sure has been looking more and more wonderful! You can be part of the St. Joseph Villa's fund-raiser, the tickets are $30 each for the performance or $100 each for the performance and pre-performance supper at the Retreat Center. For information, call (781) 383-6024, for tickets write Sisters of St. Joseph, 339 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset MA 02025. Tickets for reserved seats will be picked up on the evening of the performance at a special table at the Music Circus.

LIBRARY SURVEYS

This week we'll start off by giving everyone a little "homework" assignment — our Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees have just released a consumer survey asking patrons for their thoughts and suggestions for the future of that fine library. Be sure to look for the survey insert in today's issue of the Mariner. There are also copies at the circulation desk of the library, Town Hall, Hingham Public Library, the Community Center, Buttonwood Books and several other locations around town. Help our trustees out with your visions for our library's future, everyone will benefit!

FOOD PANTRY WISH LIST

While we are on the subject of our community, don't forget the Food Pantry Wish List! The needed items are: Laundry detergent, dishwashing liquid, toothpaste, toilet tissue, paper towels, feminine products, regular coffee, tea, fruit juices and granulated sugar. Just drop the items off at the Pantry, located at the Second Congregational Church.

FARMERS' MARKET

Have you been to the Farmer's Market yet? Oh what fun it is! Held every Thursday afternoon on the Cohasset Common, beginning at 2:30 p.m., you can purchase just about anything you need in the way of flowers, herbs, veggies — even seafood (fresh, natch). Meet tons of people, get tons of goodies, and have fun (some form of entertainment is always there). Oh yes, bring the kiddos, they love it, too!

RECOGNITION DESERVED

Robert W. Simms of Cohasset was honored at Boston University's recent Employee Service Recognition Dinner. The ceremony recognizes employees who are retiring or who have given 10 or 25 years of service to the university. Simms, an associate professor at the School of Medicine, was presented with a crystal bowl for 10 years of service.

ATTENTION SOCCER PLAYERS

Attention all of you soccer players — The South Shore Soccer Camp, Session I, begins Monday, Aug. 3; its Session II begins Aug. 10. The camp is located in Cohasset at Cohasset High School. Outdoor facilities include three full size playing fields along with two smaller fields. They also have the indoor facilities of Cohasset High School at their disposal; locker rooms will be available for campers to use. The staff is made up of college and high school coaches along with college players to ensure a staff/camper ratio of 1:8. They strive to improve skills, knowledge of the game, and confidence in all players. They have Junior Developmental for the young developing soccer player, and Senior Advanced Academy, for the player desiring intensive, advanced tactical and technical training. Players are grouped ac-

OPINION

EDITORIAL

New hope for the village

Years ago, we had the opportunity to live in New Hope, Minnesota. It was a great town and a new one by New England standards. As we recall, it was incorporated sometime after World War II.

New Hope had beautiful bike trails and parks, and lovely neighborhoods with wide streets, cul de sacs and sidewalks — all part of a carefully crafted master plan.

But there were few twisting, narrow roads and no old Colonials, Capes or Victorian farmhouses dotting the landscape.

There was another important thing missing: a downtown.

After moving in, we drove around trying to find one. The only area that qualified was a shopping mall anchored by a K-Mart store.

Few can argue that here in Cohasset we have something special.

Cohasset Village is one of the many jewels in this quaint New England town of which we are all so proud.

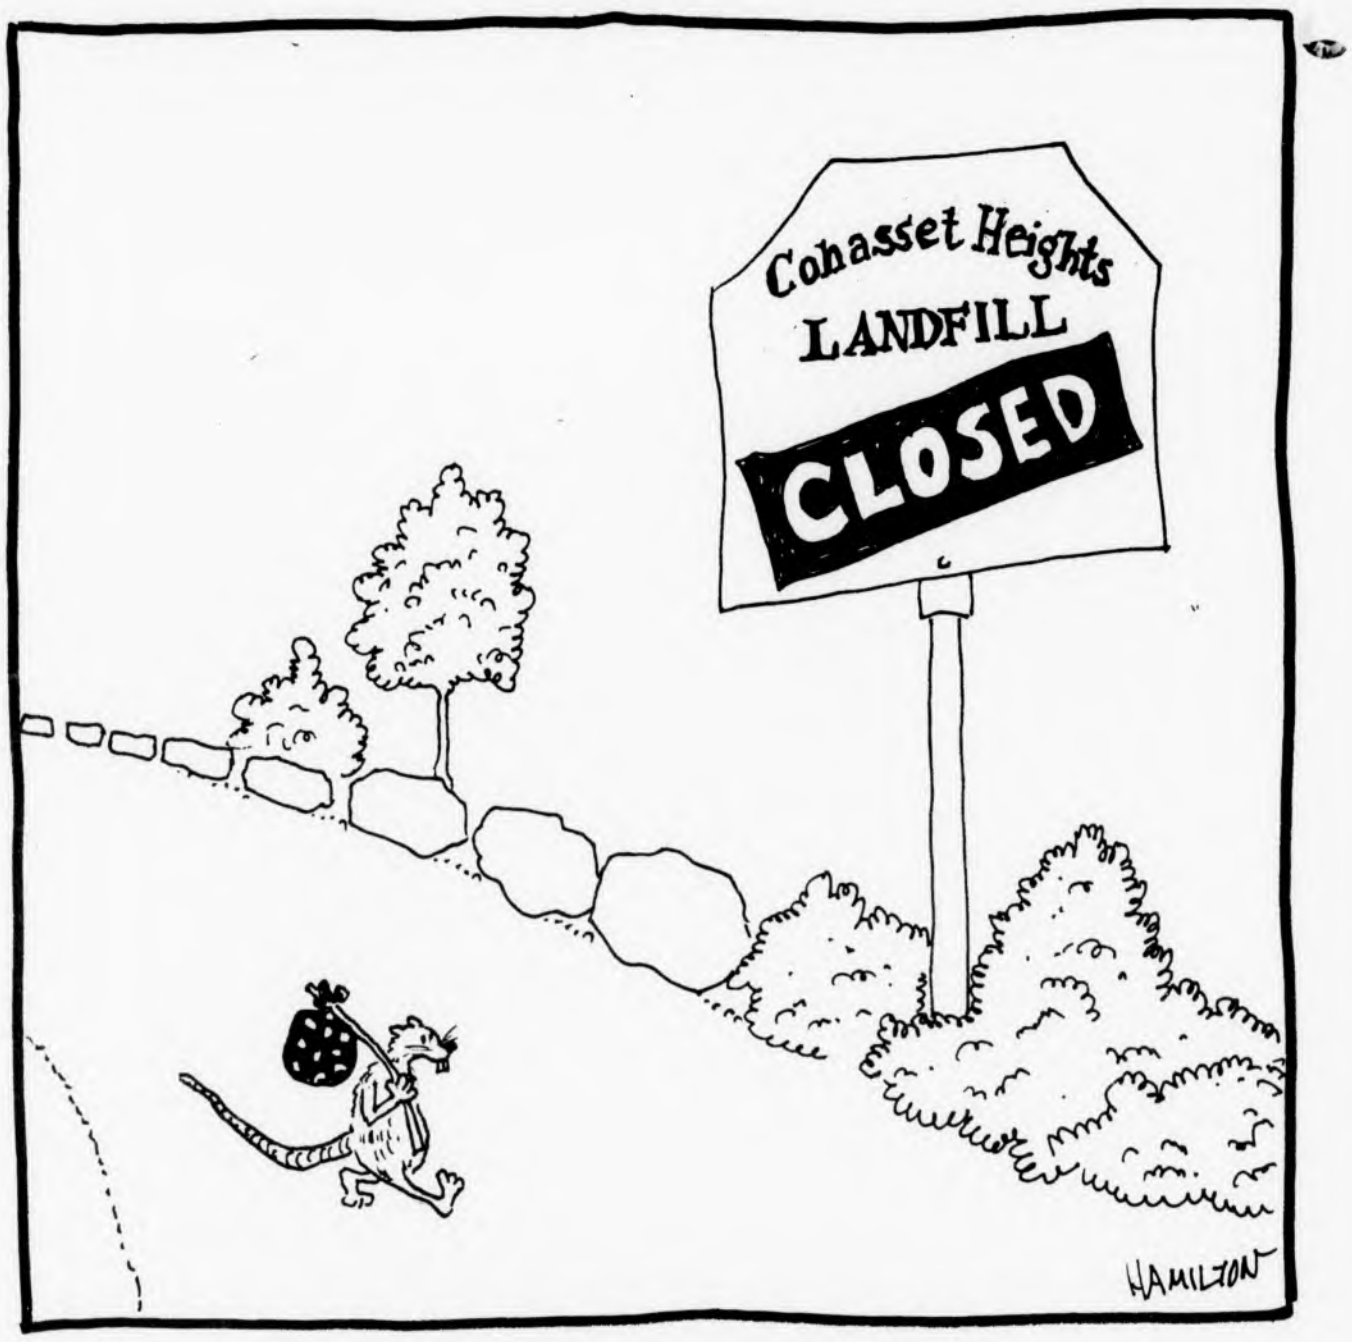
But like so many of America's main streets — which are disappearing — it's a fragile place.

The businesses and shops are small "Mom & Pop" operations for the most part. They depend on visitors and residents to survive.

Route 3A will continue to be a draw, so improving the village has been at the forefront of many merchants' minds so that you and I will go out of our way to shop there.

At 7:30p.m., tonight at town hall, a village forum is slated seeking public input on a new sidewalk proposed for the stretch of South Main Street from Jason Road to its intersection with Elm Street. A $165K state grant will pay for the project.

However, some want to sideline the sidewalk proposal. They say the brakes should be put on any village infrastructure improvements until an overall master plan can be developed.



In an ideal world, we'd be inclined to agree. But the fact of the matter is, master plans work when you can start from scratch, like in New Hope, which was once an open field waiting for an architect with a design. It didn't evolve over time, like Cohasset did.

We worry grand master plans not only cost a lot of money but they more often than not end up on the shelf.

New sidewalks, curbing, parking and more can be done on a "piecemeal" basis when intelligent people who share a common vision work together.

It's critical that we keep the village momentum going, so Cohasset's "downtown" can thrive. We wholeheartedly support moving ahead with the St. Stephen's sidewalk which will not only make that part of South Main Street more attractive, but will certainly make the street safer for pedestrians.

Bradley questions Murray vote on Gun Safety Bill

State Rep. candidate Garret Bradley took issue with Representative Mary Jeannette Murray's vote against the recent gun safety bill that was passed by the Massachusetts House of Representatives. Bradley, a former Assistant District Attorney in Plymouth County believes that the legislation would help protect children and reduce violence in neighborhoods.

"The legislation that Representative Murray voted against would make gun owners responsible for the safe use and storage of their firearms," said Bradley. "The bill mandates the safe storage of all guns and calls for all assault and other large capacity weapons that are sold in our state to include safety devices designed to prevent the discharge of the weapons by and unauthorized user. This legislation would without a doubt help to prevent the needless deaths of children and others who are killed each year in gun related accidents."

"The legislation is not denying people the right to own guns, but rather asking those who choose to own guns to be responsible for the safety of their family and the surrounding community."

The legislation increases the punishment for those criminals who use guns when committing felonies. The bill also provides for cost-effective ways for responsible gun owners to secure their weapons, including the provision of gunlocks and other safety devices, Bradley said.

Cutler supports managed care reform

State Rep. candidate Josh Cutler supports managed care reform legislation that is currently stalled in the State Legislature.

"It's time to put the care back in managed care," Cutler said. "The current state of managed care forces our doctors to practice defensive medicine and provides incentives that encourage doctors to put profits ahead of patients."

"Seriously ill patients often cannot get access to treatments or specialists their doctors recommend. Disclosure of vital information on HMO retention rates, coverage, and treatment availability is unavailable, and there is no standard appeals process or grievance procedure. It's no wonder consumers lack confidence in HMOs," Cutler said.

The legislation currently under consideration at the Statehouse seeks to improve access to care, strengthen the patient-provider relationship, and safeguard the rights of managed care enrollees. Entitled "An Act to Protect Consumers in Managed Health Care Plans in the Commonwealth," the current bill is co-sponsored by the chairs of the House and Senate Health Care Committee, and is supported by a coalition of leading health care advocates across the state.

Key provisions of the legislation include adoption of the "prudent layperson" standard in determining the appropriateness of emergency room treatment. Patients would be entitled to visit specialists when recommended by their doctors.

Consumers would have the option of purchasing a "point-of-service" plan. This option would allow consumers to have coverage (usually at a higher co-payment) for providers outside the managed care network.

If the bill is not acted on by the close of the legislative session July 31, the legislation will have to be refiled next year.

Bradley coffee hours

Assistant District Attorney and state Rep. Candidate Garrett Bradley continues to host "coffees" during the summer.

Aug. 2, noon, Bob and Ellen Garrow, 7 Partridge Dr., Hingham; Aug. 4, 7:30 p.m., Jean Marie Fleck, 3 W St., Hull; Aug. 5, 10 a.m., Judy O'Donnell, 175 Beach Ave., Hull; Aug 12, 7:30 p.m., John and Mary Sullivan, 12 Chamberlain Run, Hingham; Aug. 20, 7:30 p.m., Rick and Lynn Linehan, 7 Harvest Ln., Hingham; Aug. 21, 6 p.m., David Raftery and Barbara Webster, 1 Point Allerton Ave., Hull; Aug. 25, 7:30 p.m., Jean and Jay Driscoll, 1 Winthrop Rd., Hingham; Aug. 26, 7:30 p.m., Phil and Deborah Edmunson, 55 Cottage St., Hingham.

If you would like to attend a "coffee" or need information about the Bradley campaign, please call 741-9998.

HEALTH NOTES

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Can Mosquitoes Transmit Aids?

Recently, the health board was asked if one could get AIDS from mosquitoes. The answer is that experts don't think so. In theory, the answer is yes, but it would require the mosquito to contract AIDS, assimilate the virus into its system and then transmit it as a part of its next bite of a human being. No one has ever found a mosquito carrying the AIDS virus, and there is no evidence that the virus can survive in mosquitoes or that anyone with AIDS got it from a mosquito. Other viral infections such as Yellow Fever, and Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE), yes, but not AIDS.

EEE and Lyme Disease

Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) is a rare but devastating illness transmitted by mosquitoes. Lyme disease is primarily carried by Deer ticks.

EEE has been found in eastern and southeastern Massachusetts. Human cases have most frequently occurred in Plymouth and Bristol counties. On July 1, a case was reported in Rhode Island in a 44 year old resident who died on June 21. He became ill on June 17. The last previous case was an infant in Springfield who died in 1995. The mortality rate for those infected is high, and survivors often suffer severe neurological damage. Symptoms include: acute distress at onset, high fever, altered level of consciousness and neurological dysfunction

The Massachusetts EEE surveillance program traps mosquitoes throughout the season to assess mosquito population levels and EEE viral carriage in high risk areas. You can help. Report any cases of encephaletic-like illnesses through your doctor to the health agent.

For more information contact your health agent.

Lyme Disease has been in the news recently because several competing drug companies have announced a vaccine for it. Carried by several species of small ticks, Lyme disease can cause arthritis, heart problems and nerve damage. Prevalent on the Atlantic coast between Massachusetts and Maryland, the first instances of infection were reported in Lyme Connecticut.

Principal symptoms are an annular rash around the site of infection(tick bite). Other symptoms are malaise, fatigue, fever, stiff neck, lasting several weeks or more in untreated patients. Treatment is effective if detected early and treated over a period of weeks with antibiotics.

Vaccines for Lyme disease, and any other bacteria-like infection are less effective than vaccines for viral infections such as Chicken pox. Accordingly the best defense against Lyme disease is full clothing cover and frequent inspections for the presence of ticks. Early removal is important.. For more information on Lyme disease, contact the Health Office.

Mosquito Control Committee Joins the Board of Health

Recently, the Mosquito Control Committee (CMCC), Chaired by Charles Gainor of Sohier street requested that the Committee be included under the Board of Health. At its June 24th meeting the Board voted to accept the CMCC's recommendation. The board of Health will promote the goals of the CMCC, which are:

To reduce the likelihood of an outbreak of Eastern Equine Encephalitis

To reduce the need for using chemical pesticides in the control of Mosquito populations.

For information about mosquito control, contact the Plymouth County Mosquito Control District office at 781 585-5450 or the Board of Health

Chickenpox Vaccinations

Healthy children continue to die from Chickenpox, which is the leading cause of vaccine-preventable deaths in children in the United States, despite the availability of vaccine and strong recommendations for its use. In Massachusetts, Vaccinations are now mandatory for children entering Day Care before August 1, this year. For Kindergarten children, the mandatory date is September 1999.

School project money ahead of schedule

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITERS

The $31.8 million increase recently allotted to the School Building Assistance Fund as part of the Fiscal year 1999 state budget means that communities can expect reimbursement for their school construction costs sooner than anticipated.

Superintendent Stephen Hart is pleased with the news. "State reimbursement wasn't really anticipated until 2002 but now we're expecting the first payment this year. If you need an example to translate that, it's like paying off your mortgage sooner—the sooner it's paid off, the less interest you have to pay.

"This will have some impact on the overall cost for the new school construction at the elementary school since there will be less interest accrued. It's also helpful because interest rates are lower now and we'll get a better rate than we'd projected in 1996."

This is good news for taxpayers.

"This reimbursement cuts the construction-related tax increase to Cohasseters by a third for the years 2000 and 2001," Town Accountant Michael Buckley said.

That means the owner of a $300,000 home will pay about $120 less over those two years than he would have if the reimbursement wasn't coming in two years ahead of schedule.

"When we originally presented this plan to the voters, we had to set it in the worst possible scenario," explained Buckley, adding "but now we can shave two years off of our projection, which was set for five years."

Towns such as Cohasset are able to take on such pricey construction thanks to the School Building Assistance Bureau (SBAB) first established by the Massachusetts legislature in 1948.

The SBAB was established to help burgeoning post-war communities build schools for the baby boom segment of their population.

However the program has not been enough to convince some local towns to approve new construction projects. That's because most cities and towns don't have the kind of money that the state does.

Compounding this conundrum is that much of the SBAB's money is slated for urban schools to help desegregate students. This means that most suburban schools are not on the high priority list for the SBAB.

With the old figures based on the median valuation of a home at $300,000, the increase in the median tax bill would have been about $180 in 2000 and 2001. With the earlier reimbursement, that increase will be about $60 less in each of those years.

The School Building Assistance Act prioritizes reimbursement schedules for school construction based on specific criteria that fall into three categories. Category One building is the priority category and projects in this niche are guaranteed 90% reimbursement of total project costs. Such construction is undertaken to help correct racial imbalance in schools.

Category Two (in which Cohasset Elementary falls and which will cover about 60 percent of the cost of the project) encompasses construction to accommodate a growing student population or "to provide a full range of educational programs and to maintain full accreditation," according to the Department of Education fact sheet which outlines the Act.

Category Three covers facility projects.

The SBAB does have its critics who argue that school departments may make unnecessary renovations or build new schools when only smaller renovations are needed because the SBAB won't cover lesser renovations.

School committee chairman Rick Shea would argue with that, in light of the discussions leading up to town approval for the new Osgood School two years ago.

"In the discussion leading up to that approval, there were a lot of discussions about what the timing of the state reimbursement would be. At that time, the projection was that it would take five years. Many opponents of the school project painted some worse-case scenarios of the state funding taking longer or whether funding would be available at all and that was part of their objection to it.

"In fact, there was some concern at that time whether the SBAB would continue to be funded because of fiscal issues at the time. The school facilities committee used in its estimate the full cost with a five-year wait for reimbursement. In fact, it's been two years and the town is now going to be receiving its reimbursement."

With the old figures based on the median valuation of a home at $300,000, the increase in the median tax bill would have been about $180 in 2000 and 2001. With the earlier reimbursement, that increase will be about $120 less over two years (or $60 a year).

"If you look at all of the assumptions that the school committee came in with in terms of total impact, time of completion, receipt of the reimbursement from the state and interest, all of their assumptions have either been met or exceeded," said Shea. "I would like to say that all of this points to what a super job the school facilities committee did in planning the project and estimating the cost.

"It also illustrates what a disappointment it is that the original proposal of the school's facilities committee to include renovation of the Deer Hill School with the Osgood School was rejected by the voters. It was rejected by the voters based upon certain people in town questioning the conclusions of the school facilities committee. I think time has shown that the original recommendation was the best choice for the town," he said. (Deer Hill renovations would have also been eligible for reimbursement from the SBAB.)

Statehouse reporter Steve LeBlanc contributed to this story.

The fine art of bad writing

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I know this will come as a shock to most of you but I have never been considered for a Pulitzer Prize.

Oh. I once wrote captions for a series that was nominated for one but it lost and the author didn't win one for another 20 years, long after I had ridden off into the sunrise.

Robert is a corporate lawyer by trade, which gives him a leg up on the rest of us since he's been writing in legalese for the past 20-some years. The rest of us call it Greek.

How unfortunate that I should learn so late in life that there is an award well within my range of accomplishment.

For the past 17 years, Scott Rice of the San Jose State English Department has held the Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest for the worst opening sentence in an imaginary novel.

And you thought San Jose State was best known throughout the land for its football team!

The winner of the 1998 prize, announced last week, was Robert Perry of Milton.

Robert is a corporate lawyer by trade, which gives him a leg up on the rest of us since he's been writing in legalese for the past 20-some years. The rest of us call it Greek.

His contribution to the decline of the English language is the opening line — you're only allowed one sentence — of a detective novel in which the victim of murder most foul is a food critic for a newspaper.

If the critic wasn't dead already, then the first sentence in Robert's novel would certainly have finished him.

"The corpse exuded the irresistible aroma of a piquant, ancho chili glaze enticingly enhanced with a hint of fresh cilantro as it lay before him, coyly garnished by a garland of variegated radicchio and carmelized onions . . ."

There's more but, well, you get the idea.

The award itself is named for Edward George Bulwer-Lytton (1801-72), an English writer who once turned out historical novels like Bob Parker turns out Spensers.

His most memorable work was "The Last Days of Pompeii," but he is best remembered for, as one critic put it, "his seemingly endless convoluted sentences."

"The Last Days of Pompeii" was made into a major motion picture 63 years ago but cinema afficionados still recall it best for the wrist watches worn by Roman soldiers in 79 AD.

Bulwer-Lytton also had the misfortune to begin one of his novels with the phrase, "It was a dark and stormy night . . ."

It originated with Bulwer-Lytton but it has since become such a cliche for bad writing that it is the standard opening for one of Snoopy's unpublished novels in the comic strip "Peanuts."

Hence, the annual Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest.

It is a maxim in the writing business that one should keep one's work brief, unadorned and, in some cases, understood by your average 12-year-old, if there is such a thing.

Sometimes, in those places where writers gather, you'll see a sign that says "KISS." Before you scream "sexual harassment," it merely stands for "Keep It Simple, Stupid."

Some editors go to great lengths to make sure their writers keep their opening sentences brief.

One frustrated obituary writer found the least common denominator when he wrote:

"Dead.

"That's what John Jones is today."

No Bulwer-Lytton award there.

Greenbush Line towns to take MBTA on

Tri-town rail report to be drafted

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

In an unprecedented move, officials in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate are co-authoring a document detailing their towns' concerns about the proposed restoration of commuter rail service to the South Shore. They plan to use the document as fuel for discussions with state and federal officials about how they feel their towns have been mistreated by the MBTA.

"We all agree that the T isn't dealing with us in good faith and when they do give us information, it's lousy," said Cohasset Selectman Thomas Callahan.

Selectmen from the three communities agreed at a July 22 meeting that the MBTA has not fairly dealt with their towns since the restoration of the 17.7-mile Greenbush commuter line was proposed. They hope that by joining together and speaking with one voice, they can appeal to officials who may have some influence on the MBTA to furnish them with accurate data and information about the project.

"We need to find the community bonds that we can unite behind and get the leverage we need to improve the situation for our towns," said Cohasset Mitigation Committee Chairman Tom Gruber.

The towns want to meet with officials from the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to find out what other measures they can take to get the information they need to properly mitigate the effects of rail on their communities — if the project comes to fruition.

The MBTA proposes to begin service from Boston to Scituate by the year 2002.

"We need to find the community bonds that we can unite behind and get the leverage we need to improve the situation for our towns."
— Mitigation Committee Chairman Tom Gruber

Selectmen from the three towns agreed that inviting officials to speak with them would be the most effective route to take.

"They would have to be impressed listening to a group of 15 people representing their towns with concerns," said Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton.

Having officials in the same room would force them to deal with the issue, rather than skimming the report submitted by the three towns and brushing it aside, added Cohasset Selectman Merle Brown.

"If they're here listening to us, then they have to answer us directly," he said.

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan suggested asking Trudy Coxe, the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs, to request that the MBTA submit a supplemental environmental impact report — a document which reviews the trains' effects on the local environment.

Macmillan said an update would be warranted because five years have passed since the last report and that changes in plans and new information have been presented during that time.

Callahan advised lobbying non-governmental agencies, such as the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, as well as state legislators to let them know the sentiments of the three communities.

"We should do it on all possible fronts. I don't know if the T answers to anybody, but it's the only way to get into a confrontational mode," he said.

During the nearly three-hour discussion last week, officials cited examples of their encounters with the MBTA on the Greenbush project.

In Scituate, where the MBTA plans to end the commuter line and build a train layover station, officials are frustrated.

Selectman Shawn Harris said the MBTA's plans are inaccurate, with hundred-year-old homes missing on the project maps. Harris also said he thought the MBTA had taken too many "short cuts" in deciding where to locate the layover station in Scituate.

Hingham Selectmen Chairman Katharine Reardon echoed other selectmen's concerns about the MBTA's evaluation of noise impacts to the area. She called the MBTA's practice of measuring the average noise impact over a 24-hour period "absurd." She added that other transportation alternatives must also be looked at.

Two members of Braintree's mitigation committee also attended the meeting. Michael Lang and Bill Reed said their committee had come to the same conclusions about the MBTA as Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham.

"You can put a spin on any report," said Michael Lang. "A lot of the material in (the MBTA's) report is kind of the truth, but it's not worth building a train for."

Lang, who said his committee didn't have as much difficulty obtaining information from the T, said Braintree's committee would gladly share with the three towns the information it has gathered about the project thus far in the process.

Each of the three boards will appoint one or two representatives to serve on the subcommittee that will draft the tri-town document. Selectmen said they hoped to have the report finished within a matter of weeks. The group is tentatively scheduled to meet Aug. 5 at Cohasset Town Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Support Cohasset youth

The recreation commission is sponsoring a dance from 7 to 10 p.m., Friday, July 31, at the town hall. Admission is $5 per person.

A garage sale will be held at the Town Garage, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 1. Proceeds will benefit "Project Garage." Help support our youth.

Supervisors are needed for the Teen Center, hours are flexible. The salary is $7 per hour. Applicants must be responsible, patient and caring. Call Jen Lagrotteria, Director of the Teen Center at 383-7003 or the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109.

Local riders accept the Pan-Mass Challenge

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

While the Tour de France winds down to its final stages a native Frenchman will be biking his way from Sturbridge to Provincetown this weekend to raise money for the Jimmy Fund for cancer research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

Cohasset resident Francois-Laurent Nivaud will be joining what organizers expect will be more that 2,000 other bikers this weekend who will be traveling across the state as part of the Pan-Mass Challenge (PMC).

The group hopes to raise upwards of $5.75 million this year for the Jimmy Fund in what has turned into the largest fund-raiser for the group annually, raising as much as 35 percent of the money donated to the organization each year.

The most successful venture of its kind and the oldest now going in New England, the PMC has raised $27 million for the Jimmy Fund since the race was started in 1980.

Nivaud himself has been a vital cog to the effort, raising $101,000 since 1995 when he accepted a dare from Pan-Mass founder Billy Starr to take part in the event that year.

With only 100 days to get into shape for the nearly 200-mile ride, Nivaud, the managing director of the Boston Harbor Hotel, locked himself into the hotel's gym and came out 20 lb. lighter and with his biking skills back in tact.

In that first year Nivaud raised $22,000 for the cause by selling stripes on a French flag that was mounted to the back of his bike. A driving wind and rain made the flag much heavier than expected, but the determined gentleman would not be denied the satisfaction of crossing the finish line.

"At these events I meet people who are very committed to this cause," said Nivaud. "I am always impressed by their level of emotion. People share their hopes, fears and personal reasons for riding."

After a little friendly persuasion with his supporters at the hotel Nivaud convinced 13 of his fellow workers to do the race with him last year. In all the group raised $75,000 in 1997.

Nivaud has chipped in some other ways as well. In addition to hosting retreats and other events for the PMC, his hotel also donated some 2,000 shower caps last year to help keep the bike seats dry before the race.

Riders can take the challenge in either a one-day or a two-day package and have a choice of six routes they can take including Sturbridge-Provincetown (the original 194-mile route) and the Sturbridge-Bourne-Boston (187-mile) route.

The average rider is 39-years-old, trains for three months, solicits 40 sponsors and raises more than $2,500. More than 80 percent of the riders are close to someone who has battled cancer or are recovering from the disease themselves.

As well, more than 1,600 volunteers from over 100 sponsoring groups donate their time and effort to the event.

The race has grown at an incredible rate since 1980 when 36 riders raised $10,200 for the cause.

By 1990 almost 1,000 riders had raised $1.3 million.

The goals for this year is 2,200 riders pedaling their little hearts out for a new annual record of $5.75 million. Donations and riders have both increased every year so far.

Many of those in the race have

Cohasset swim team dunks Duxbury Aquadux

By Jennifer Rafferty
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Big Blue scored another win against the Duxbury Aquadux last Friday in Cohasset. Congratulations to the 8 and under girls for some particularly strong swimming during this meet! The final score was Cohasset 355 and the Duxbury Aquadux 251. The next meet is at home Friday at 1 p.m. against the Duxbury Yacht Club.

Did you know that our Cohasset swim team is renowned for its excellence in training and competition? Newcomer Helen Daley mentioned that the Boston College swim coach recommended Cohasset as a town with a superior swim team for serious swimmers. This was one of the many reasons why Helen chose Cohasset when her family moved here a year ago from Chagrin Falls, Ohio. Her daughter Mamme swims in the 10 and under group. Apologies to Mamme for the numerous errors in this column which identified her first name incorrectly. Mamme has placed in many recent races for Cohasset including freestyle, backstroke and medley relays. Mamme says that Cohasset requires more laps in practice and more overall practice time than her swim team in Chagrin Falls, yet Chagrin boasts a larger pool. Thanks to her sister Jenne for working as a runner during the last meet and welcome to Cohasset for all of the Daley family. Newcomer Colin Conway swims in the 10 and under boys' group. He arrived in Cohasset from Maryland six weeks ago and this is his first experience on a swim team. Colin prefers backstroke and freestyle. Make sure that you take the opportunity to meet any swimmers who are new to town.

The swimmer's tip for this week is to avoid looking at your competitors while you are racing. Keep your eyes focused on the end of your lane! When you take the time to look at another lane and swimmer, you lose valuable seconds. In the 10 and above age groups, you also should be aware that you can be disqualified if you touch the pool bottom or make a mistake with your stroke.

Here are the results from last Friday's meet against the Duxbury Aquadux:

In the boys 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Alex Shipp, Alex Hunt, Peter Ernst and Cameron Cunningham came in first, and the team of Trip Harper, Kenny Muir, Cliff Musto, and Viner came in second.

In the girls 8 and Under Medley Relay the team of Megan Sacks, Abigail Markert, Alyssa Campbell and Emma Hernan came in first, the team of Sally Meehan, Alexx Hoholik, Samantha Lehr and McKenna Teague came in second, and the team of May McCarthy, Maura Regan, Elizabeth Spelman and Meg Anderson came in third.

In the boys 10 and Under Medley Relay the team of Noah Wilcox, Dan McCarthy, Parker Berg and Zach

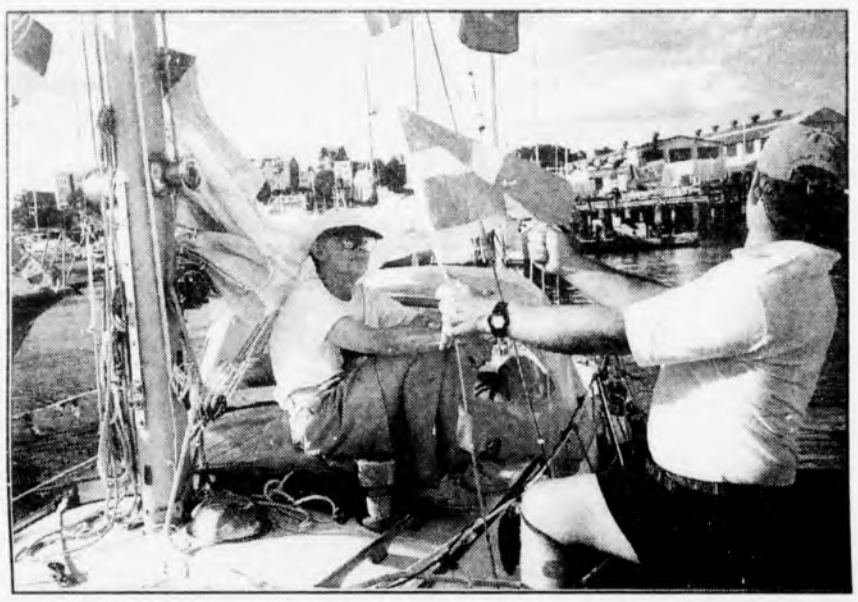
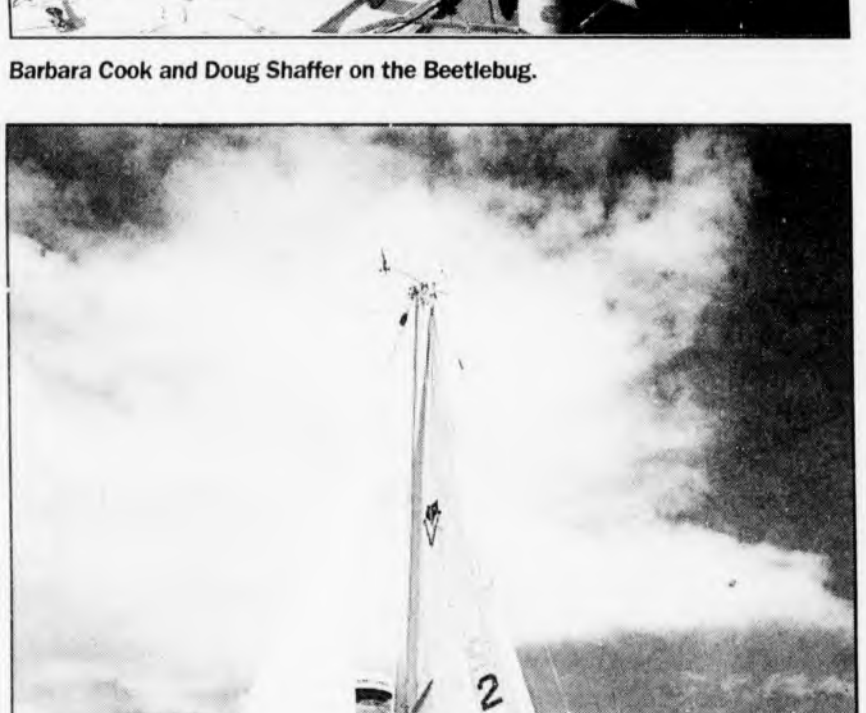
Cohasset sailors salute USS Constitution



Four boats from the Cohasset Yacht Club participated in last week's Bicentennial Salute for the USS Constitution. The bicentennial events started Thursday, July 23, when the Navy's oldest existing warship was turned around in Boston Harbor. Friday, July 24, events included a crew parade in downtown Boston and visits from international tall ships and foreign navys. Saturday, July 25, featured a harborside concert by the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, a lighted parade of 30 invited private vessels and a fireworks display in Boston Harbor.

The Cohasset Yacht Club was asked to participate by the parade organizers after the club's strong showing last August during the parade of lights at the Boston Harbor Hotel on the occasion of the hotel's 10th anniversary celebration.



The club's representative boats were the sailboats Beetlebung, owned by Ken Cook; Max, co-owned by Robin Lawrence and Jim Hamilton; and the motorboats Jester, owned by Dick Karoff; and Saucy Fox, owned by Al Weisenfluh. Lights were strung along the boats' standing rigging, signal flags up the shrouds, the club burgee from the mast of Max and an American flag flying from Beetlebung's mizzon mast. Each boat was introduced in front of a review stand just off the pier of the Constitution in the Charlestown Navy Yard. Cohasset residents on the four representative boats were Laurie Hamilton, Suzie Neer, Sandy Manzella and Barbara Cook. Deck work and able assistance was provided by Doug and Sue Shaffer from the Charlestown Marina, Sue Borra and Jill Hamilton of Charlestown and Rob Lawrence Jr. of Cambridge. Conventures of Boston organized the events and helped provide lights and slips for the Cohasset contingent.

Beachcomber bass tourney Saturday

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Each time the door swung open a liquid gust of hot humidity swirled into the cool refrigerated air of the store. Ohhh came the exclamations of joy, it is nice in here. Each angler in the dim coolness took plenty of time looking over their selections, not anxious to be propelled back out into the furnace. Off the walls they came, a bug Rapala, a hoochie, a red tube lure, a Mambo Mino, pogies, herring, squid, hooks, leaders, all giving clues to what and where each angler was planning to catch.

After a short period, typical of mid-July, the doldrums have given way to another burst of great fishing, with a greater variety of fish. Ray Davis and the gang got soaked on the way, but Matt was happy sporting his 20 and 1/2 pound striper. The next day they all were out on the water again using pogies. Everyone got a keeper except Ray. Doesn't it figure.

Meanwhile over at Cohasset Harbor the action under the bridge is accelerating. Steve Hogan made a successful trip over from Pembroke, tossing fresh herring under the arch to come up with a 31 inch bass. Many anglers launch their boats at Hingham, the Back River and Pemberton to take advantage of excellent fishing around the harbor islands and the outer edges. Ed King of Weymouth made the island tour and returned with a fine 36 inch bass. Steve fooled his fish with a bucktail jig near Bumpkin Island. Outside Minot Ledge gave up a bass for a change amongst all the dogfish that have invaded the neighborhood. Dick Burbridge's mackerel chunk was take-out food for a 22 pound, 40 1/2 inch striper. Reports have that most of the usual bass spots around the outside of the Glades northwest to the Grampuses full of hungry dogs coming to the surface to take pogie and mackerel chunks.

Those catching bass have been doing well in close. Don Schneider connected on a big bass. Harry picked up his first keeper ever after countless schoolies over the years. Harry's bass inhaled a herring strip. Jean Boyle and Maureen Harrold nailed twin bass inside the Shag on mackerel. On successive nights Jim Figueredo got into the blues like the old days, boating and releasing 27 big choppers. Most were between 15-17 pounds. The next trip out he and Dave Marks got nothing but stripers. Where are the blues Jim? After he laughed he said you have to go way out. Between the B Buoy and Minot is the best I can figure.

Mike Kelley had a personal best on the flyrod. Those that know Mike know how much time he spends on the water casting. This week his yellow/chartreuse Deceiver settled over a fat Minot Beach bass. The big striper dropped the scale to 23 and 3/4 pounds. Nice fish on the fly! Adam Conway wowed the fishing clan of uncles and parents and grandparents he hails from. Four year-old Adam used a fat seaworm to entice a 3 pound, 3 ounce fluke to his hook from the waters of Boston Harbor.

Where did the bass go? Ken McGrath found them in close along Jerusalem Road and Doctor's Island. Numerous boats jockeyed for position around every good spot. Ken uses 2-3 worms per turn on his tube worm. He reports he is slamming bass on his tube and worm rig.

The teams will be setting out early Saturday from the Cohasset Yacht Club for the Annual Fishing Tournament. Great pains and preparation go into this fun tourney every year.

The Third Annual Beachcomber Bass Tournament also kicks off Saturday at midnight. The Beachcomber is for recreational bass anglers and features weekly prizes through September. Anglers can sign up at the shop and obtain more details.

Catch the one that is hard to carry!

SPORTS BRIEFS

Cohasset Men's Softball League

On this beautiful Sunday afternoon the defending champs were defeated by the up and coming new squad. Also, the first place team, Dog Pound, kept rolling along.

Despite five hits each by Kevin and Joe Dooley the Last Call squad could not hold off the Grinders.

Dan Varney led his first year team to a 17-14 victory. The Grinders also got home runs by the big guy with a gray beard and the left handed guy who played catcher.

John Litchfield was all smiles because his first place team claimed their fifth victory.

In the third game the Cell Boys had another poor showing. The Grinders won and moved into a tie for second place.

been there before. Last year more than 70 percent of the riders had been in the race before.

"Many of the first-time riders are curious to see if they are up to the physical challenge," said PMC executive director Billy Starr. "What keeps them coming back is the emotional fulfillment they take home with them after the weekend-long event.

"They people they meet and the stories they hear from the cancer survivors as well as those who have lost loved ones to cancer are what make the PMC unique. You leave feeling like it's within your power to make a change in people's lives."

Junior lacrosse program wishes for old equipment

The Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program is accepting donations of old sticks, gloves, helmets, arm pads and goaltending equipment, hoping to make life a bit easier for players and parents.

Currently, the team has no extra equipment to carry to games or lend to players. That has, in the past, meant that players who have forgotten some or all of their gear have wound up driving home — often from several towns away — or have been forced to sit out.

"We can't let a player on the field without proper equipment," says junior team coach Chuck Jaffe. "The best we can hope for is to share, which is tricky given how often kids come on and off the field."

The club is particularly interested in helmets, gloves, armpads and goaltending equipment. Jaffe noted that sticks are the one thing most players have when they start out in the game, "although we would accept stick donations too."

The youth program is hoping to secure enough equipment to help out players in its summer camp, so that children who are just testing out the sport won't go whole hog on gear, only to find out they would rather play something else.

"Lacrosse equipment isn't cheap," Jaffe says. "We're just hoping that people who have some of it lying around in their basement, or whose children have outgrown youth equipment, can help us move the game along and support the junior club and lacrosse booster program in the process."

To donate lacrosse equipment to the Cohasset Junior program, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

Special Olympians bring home the gold

Jessica MacDonald and Jay Nothnagle competed in the Massachusetts Special Olympics State Summer Games at MIT in June.

Jessica participated in track and field and won two Gold Medals in the softball throw and shot put.

Jay skippered a Rhodes 19 in Unified Sailing competition on the Charles River and won all seven of the races held in the 2-day event.

His seven first places earned him a Gold Medal.

Both Jessica and Jay qualified for the 1999 World Special Olympics Summer Games to be held in Raleigh-Durham.

OBITUARIES

William T. Logan

A memorial Mass was celebrated July 25 at St. Anthony's Church for William Thomas Logan, 78, of Cohasset, an inspector for the Department of Public Utilities, who died Thursday at South Shore Hospital.

Mr. Logan leaves his wife, Rita (Donelan) Logan; a son, Gregory Logan of Middleboro; a daughter, Carolyn Logan of Cohasset; a brother, James Logan of Winchester; two sisters, Margerite Carey of Cohasset and Claire McClean of Cape Cod; and a grandchild.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Norwell and Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the South Shore Conservatory of Music, Scholarship Fund for Young Musicians, 1 Conservatory Rd., Hingham 02043.

Myron Merrill

Myron "Mac" Merrill of Cohasset, a cook, died June 20.

Mr. Merrill was formerly of Waltham. He was a cook at Hart's Diner.

He leaves a sister, Leona Perrault of Plymouth.

A graveside service was held at the Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne.

The Brasco and Sons Funeral Home, 773 Moody St., Waltham, handled the arrangements.

Giuseppina Truglia

Giuseppina (Iannino) Truglia, 96, of Cohasset, a homemaker, died Friday, July 24, at South Shore Hospital after a brief illness.

Mrs. Truglia was an avid gardener and raised many vegetables and farm animals at her home.

Born in Palermiti, Italy, daughter of the late Caterina Marcella and Antonio Iannino, she immigrated to the United States by ship in 1947 and lived in Cohasset for the past 40 years. She returned home once for her son's wedding in 1958.

Wife of the late Pasquale Truglia, she leaves two sons, Pasquale Truglia Jr. of Hull and Luigino Truglia of Palermiti, Italy; two daughters, Maria Truglia of Palermiti and Giustina Saldi of Cohasset; a sister, Elisabetta Sestito of Hull; 12 grandchildren; and 28 great-grandchildren in the U.S. and Italy; two nieces, Gina Gulla and Bettina Sestito of Palermiti, Italy; two nephews, Bruno Sestito of Hull and Anthony Sestito of Hingham; and many grandnieces and nephews. She was also sister of the late Maria Barbieri and Peppino Iannino.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Ann's Church, Lewis Street, Hull. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset made the arrangements.

Donations in Mrs. Truglia's memory may be made to St. Jude's Ranch for Children, P.O. Box 60100, Boulder City, Nev., 89006-0100.

Rose W. Crosby

Rose W. (Wartovich) Crosby, 87, of Deland, Fla., formerly of Cohasset, died Saturday, May 30.

Mrs. Crosby was born in Boston. She moved to Florida from Cohasset in 1971.

She was a member of the Deland Country Club.

Mrs. Crosby leaves her husband of 56 years, Tom Crosby; a son, Thomas Crosby of Marshfield; a daughter, Kathleen DeSario of East Hampton, N.Y.; two sisters, Anna Murray of South Boston and Eleanor Chaisson of Rockland; and six grandchildren.

A graveside service was held at Central Cemetery, Joy Place, Cohasset.

Arrangements were made by the Lankford Funeral Home, Deland, Fla.

Donations in Mrs. Crosby's memory may be made to the American Heart Association, 555 W. Granada Blvd., Suite A-1, Ormond Beach, FL 32714-9430.
